

10
10

The Rev

Profrpo McLean

With the Editors
affect. Respects

3.28.11

Library of the Theological Seminary,
PRINCETON, N. J.

Presented by A. G. Cameron, Ph.D.

BV 651 .J3 1829

James, John Angell, 1785-1859.

Christian fellowship, or,
The church member's guide

CHEER LANE SUPERIOR.

1871

THE
CHURCH MEMBERS'S
SINNS.

— — — — — *Set apart time not only for reading,
but scan out the scriptures. Page 41.*

BOSTON:
LINCOLN & ELMANES.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP,

OR THE

CHURCH MEMBER'S GUIDE.

BY J. A. JAMES, A. M.

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND.

"And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." . . . Eph. ii. 20.

EDITED

BY J. O. CHOULES, A. M.

Pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Newport, R. I.

Boston:

LINCOLN & EDMANDS, PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

No. 59 Washington-Street.

1829.

DISTRICT OF MASSACHUSETTS, to wit:

District Clerk's Office,

BE IT REMEMBERED, That on the third day of April, A. D. 1829, in the fifty third year of the Independence of the United States of America, Lincoln & Edmands, of the said district, have deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof they claim as Proprietors, in the words following, to wit :

“Christian Fellowship, or The Church Member’s Guide. By J. A. James, A. M. Birmingham, England. ‘And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.’ Eph. ii. 20. Edited by J. O. Choules, A. M. Pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Newport, R. I.”

In Conformity to the Act of the Congress of the United States, entitled, “An Act for the encouragement of Learning, by securing the copies, of Maps, Charts, and Books, to the Authors and Proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned;” and also to an Act, entitled, “An Act supplementary to an Act, entitled, An Act for the encouragement of Learning, by securing the copies of Maps, Charts, and Books to the Authors and Proprietors of such copies during the times therein mentioned: and extending the benefits thereof to the arts of Designing, Engraving, and Etching Historical and other Prints.”

JNO. W. DAVIS, Clerk of the District of Massachusetts.

PREFACE

TO THE AMERICAN EDITION.

IN presenting the following pages to the notice of the American churches, it is necessary to offer some remarks.

During the few past years, God has graciously poured out his Holy Spirit upon various regions of our country. Zion has broken forth on the right hand and upon the left, and has received a vast accession of converts from those who were once aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. The church has gazed upon her new-born children with delight, and inquired, "As for these, whence did they come?" They are recruits from the world, they are deserters from the army of the prince of the powers of darkness, they have sworn allegiance to another Sovereign, one Jesus. They have identified themselves with his cause, they are the subjects of his kingdom, they have become strangers upon the earth, that they may be citizens in heaven, and they seek that better country.

It has been frequently lamented, that there was no work upon Church Fellowship, which could be put into the hands of church members, and especially of our youthful brethren and sisters, embodying under separate heads those scriptural instructions which lie dispersed through the Sacred Volume. I have frequently heard the complaint from ministers, "O that we had a directory for our members, that all our churches and all our brethren might be one in discipline and feeling, as well as in doctrine and practice." And since my engagement in pastoral labours, and more especially when lately called to receive a large number of young and inexperienced persons to the fellowship of the church, I have felt that a Church Member's Guide was a desideratum. After a careful examination of the various works on this subject, which are in circulation in the English churches, I am persuaded that I can render no greater benefit to the Christian church, than by presenting to its attentive regard, the treatise entitled, "Christian Fellowship, or The Church Member's Guide," by the Rev. J. A. James of Birmingham. On a careful perusal of the English edition, I was convinced, that though admirably adapted to the state of the British churches, yet it required considerable alteration to render it extensively useful in our western churches, which have so happily come up from the bondage of National Establishment, passed through the wilderness of persecution, and are planted in this thrice happy land, where government does all for religion which she asks, wishes, or wants; and that is,—lets her alone.

Mr. James has displayed singular ability in his defence of the churches which have dissented from the National Establishment; and it is gratifying to see so able a champion, wielding such powerful weapons, with so fearless a temper, in a cause so good and holy as that of Protestant Nonconformity. But the existing relation of Episcopacy and dissent in England, which fully justify Mr. James in carrying his remarks on Law Establishments throughout the volume, having no place among us, it is desirable and indeed necessary, that all passages of reference to these subjects should be expunged. I may be exposed to the cavils of a few who would blame me for altering an author's work, adding to, or diminishing from it; but I find all the shelter that I need from such censure, in the opening remark of Mr. James' Preface: "The chief value of a book consists in its utility." The entire civil and religious liberty which we enjoy in this country, has produced habits and sentiments very dissimilar to those which are the result of a different state of society in our fatherland.

Bearing this fact in view, I have omitted many expressions, left out whole lines and paragraphs,

through channels which although intricate, are certainly not new.

The author has treated the subject of church government, more in a practical, than in a controversial manner. Numerous are the votive offerings which already hang around this compartment of the temple of truth; but they are too generally composed of, or attended with, a chaplet of thorns. In this treatise, the author has endeavoured to sacrifice at the same time, to both truth and love, whose altars should ever be near to each other. He has endeavoured to state his own opinions with clearness and boldness, but at the same time, without dogmatism or asperity. His aim has been rather to regulate the spiritual police of our Zion, than either professedly to strengthen its bulwarks, or to increase its means of spiritual conquest: assured that it is most mighty, when it is most holy and most peaceful; and that love and purity render our churches "bright as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners."

As the form of church government here exhibited, so far as human direction is concerned, allows of a considerable share of popular influence, the author has adopted two general principles, to which he has given great prominence in the following pages, and these are, the absolute impropriety of a few rich men attempting to lord it over God's heritage, and the equal impropriety on the part of those who are young, or immature in knowledge and experience, practically asserting their claim to equal rights, upon every occasion, in a vehement, contentious manner. In all societies, there necessarily must be some individuals, of greater influence than the rest; but this influence should ever be the result of character and usefulness, rather than of station; and should be most cheerfully conceded by others, but never forcibly taken by themselves.

If the author had been acquainted with any treatise on this subject, in which the principles here laid down and illustrated, had been sufficiently developed, he would have spared himself the trouble of this production. The little tract of Dr. Owen's, entitled "Eshcol," the addresses of Dr. Harris, and Mr. Hackett, and the Catechism of Mr. Miller, are exceedingly excellent; and the only fault belonging to them, which the author has any hope of correcting in his book, is their brevity. The compendium of the late Rev. Daniel Turner, of Abington, is very useful as a skeleton; but a mere unclothed synopsis of principles, unaccompanied by much illustration, is not sufficiently attractive for ordinary readers, who need not only to be informed what is their duty, but allured to its performance. Mr. Inne's Sketches of Human Nature are judicious to admiration, and have furnished many valuable remarks to enrich the following work; but do not so directly and comprehensively treat on the subject of church government, as to render this volume unnecessary.

CHURCH MEMBER'S GUIDE.

CHAPTER I.

ON THE NATURE OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

It is obviously incumbent on the members of any community, whether civil or sacred, to acquaint themselves with its constitution and design; without this, they can neither adequately enjoy the privileges, nor properly discharge the duties which their membership brings with it. Such persons are held more by feeling than by principle; a tenure quite insufficient, as a bond of religious connexion.

It is admitted that as in the human frame, so in the system of divine truth, there are parts of greater and less importance; and the man who would put the principles of church government upon a level with the doctrine of the atonement, and represent a belief in the former as no less essential to salvation than a reliance upon the latter, betrays a lamentable ignorance of both. Still, however, although the hand is of less consequence to vitality than the head or the heart, is it of no value? Will any one be reckless of his members, because he can lose them and yet live? So because church government is of less moment to spiritual and eternal life than faith in Christ, will any one abandon it as a vain and profitless subject? Whatever God has made the subject of revealed truth, should be guarded on that account, from being considered as too frivolous to deserve our attention.

It will probably be contended by some, in apology for their neglect, that the New Testament has laid down no specific form of church government, and that where we are left without a guide, it is useless to inquire if we are following his directions. If by this it be meant to say, that the Lord Jesus Christ has left us no apostolic precept or example, which is either directory for our practice, or obligatory upon our conscience, in the formation of Christian societies, nothing can be more erroneous. It might be presumed a priori, that a matter of such moment would not be left so unsettled, and we have only to look into the Word of God to see how groundless is the assertion. It is true that we shall search the New Testament in vain for either precedent or practice, which will support all the usages of our churches, any otherwise than as these usages are deduced from the spirit and bearing of general principles. These alone are laid down by the Apostles, but still with sufficient precision to enable us to determine whether the Episcopal, the Presbyterian, or Independent form of church government, be most consonant with the mind and will of Christ.

What is a Christian church ?

The word church signifies an assembly. In the New Testament it invariably applies to persons, not to places. It means not the building in which the assembly is convened, but the assembly itself. It has an enlarged and also a more confined signification in the Word of God. In some places it is employed to comprehend the aggregate of believers of every age and nation ; hence we read of the "general assembly and church of the first born," and of the church which "Christ loved and purchased with his blood."* In its more confined acceptation, it means a congregation of professing Christians, meeting for worship in one place ; hence we read of the church at Rome, Colosse, Philippi, &c. These are the only two senses in which the word is ever employed by the sacred writers ; consequently all provincial and national churches, or in other words to call the people of a province or nation a church of Christ, is a most gross perversion of the term, and rendering the kingdom of Jesus more a matter of geography than of religion. The sacred writers, when speaking of the Christians of a whole province, never employ the term in the singular number ; but with great precision of language speak of the churches of Galatia, Syria, Macedonia, Asia, &c.

* Acts xx. 28.

A church of Christ, then, in the latter or more usual acceptation of the term, means “ a number of professing Christians, united to each other by their own voluntary consent, having their proper officers, meeting in one place for the observance of religious ordinances, and who are independent of all other control than the authority of Christ expressed in his word.” This company of professing Christians may be few or many in number, rich or poor in their circumstances, and may meet either in a mean or magnificent building, or in no building at all. These things are purely adventitious ; for provided they answer to the above definition, they are still to all intent and purpose a church of Christ.

I. The members of the church should be such as make a credible profession of their faith in Christ ; or in other words, such as appear to be regenerated by the Spirit of God, to have believed in the Lord Jesus for salvation, and to have submitted themselves in their conduct to the authority of his word. To these the Head of the church has limited the privileges of his kingdom ; they alone can enjoy its blessings and perform its duties : and to such the Epistles are uniformly addressed, Romans i. 7. Cor. i. 2. &c. If these passages are read, it will be found that the members of the first churches are not merely admonished to be saints, but are addressed as such ; which is a circumstance of great weight in determining the question upon proper subjects of fellowship. But who is to judge in this case ? It is generally thought the church ; for although no instance can be brought from the New Testament in which any one of the primitive churches can be proved to have exercised this power, yet as it is a voluntary society, founded on the principle of mutual affection, it seems reasonable that the church should judge of the existence of those qualifications which are necessary to the enjoyment of communion. The very act of obtruding upon them any one without their own consent, whether by a minister or by elders, is destructive of one purpose of christian association,—i. e. the fellowship of the brethren. Nor is the power of searching the heart requisite for those who exercise the right of admitting others, since we are to judge of each other by outward conduct.

II. This company of professing Christians must meet in one place for the observance of religious institutes. A society that cannot associate, an assembly that cannot assemble, are perfect solecisms. When, therefore, a church becomes too large to communicate at one table, and divides to eat the Lord's supper in two distinct places of worship, there are two churches, and no longer one only.

III. These persons must be formed into a society upon the principle of mutual voluntary consent. They are not to be associated by act of civil government, by ecclesiastical decree, by ministerial authority, or by any other power than that of their own unconstrained choice. They are to give themselves first to the Lord, and then to each other. No authority whatever of an earthly nature, is to constrain them to unite themselves in fellowship, nor to select for them any particular company of believers with whom they shall associate. All is to be the result of their own selection. Parochial limits, ecclesiastical divisions of country, together with all the commands of the ministerial authority, have nothing to do in regulating the fellowship of the saints. The civil power, or the power of the magistrate, when employed to regulate the affairs of the church of Christ, is manifestly out of place. It is as much at a man's own option, so far as human authority is concerned, to say with whom he will associate in matters of religion, as it is in those of philosophy, learning, or pecuniary help, to decide who shall be his fellows.

IV. A church of Christ has its scriptural officers. Here two questions arise:—First, How many kinds of officers does the New Testament mention? Secondly, How are they to be chosen? As to the kinds of office bearers in the primitive churches, there can be neither doubt nor difficulty with any one who will impartially consult the Word of God. With all that simplicity which characterizes the works of God, which neither disfigures his productions with what is excrescent, nor incumbers them with what is unnecessary, he has instituted but two kinds of permanent officers in his church, bishops and deacons; the former to attend to its spiritual affairs, and the latter to direct its temporal concerns. That there were but two, is evident, because we have no information concerning the choice, qualifications or duties of any other. The bishops of the primitive churches correspond exactly to the pastors of modern ones. That bishop, elder, and pastor, are only different terms for the same office, is evident from Acts xx. 17, compared with the 28; Titus i. 5, 7, and 1st Peter v. 1, 2. "They are called bishops, which signifies overseers, because they overlook the spiritual concerns, and watch for the souls of their brethren," Acts xx. 28, 1st Tim. iii. 1. Pastors or shepherds, because they feed the flock of God with truth, Ephes. iv. 11. Rulers, because they guide the church, Heb. xiii. 7. "Elders, because of their age, or of their possessing those qualities which age supposes," Tit.

i. 5. "Ministers, because they are the servants of Christ and the gospel," Ephes. vi. 21.

The Deacon is appointed to receive and distribute the funds of the church, especially those which are raised for the relief of the poor. All other kinds of officers than these two, are the inventions of men, and not the appointment of Christ: and which, by intending to add splendour to the kingdom of Jesus, have corrupted its simplicity, destroyed its spirituality, and caused it to symbolize with the kingdoms of this world.

On the mode of electing them to their office the Scripture is sufficiently explicit, to justify the practice of those denominations who appeal to the suffrages of the people. If the Acts of the Apostles be studied with care, a book which seems given us more for the regulation of ecclesiastical practices, than the revelation of theological opinions, we shall find that nothing was done in the primitive churches without the co-operation of the members; no, not even when the apostles themselves were present. Even the election of a new apostle was made by brethren and not by the ministers exclusively.* The deacons were chosen by the same persons.† The decrees of the council at Jerusalem were passed also by them, and went forth with their name.* From hence we infer, that although no case occurs in the inspired history, where it is mentioned that a church elected its pastor, yet it so entirely accords with the practice of the church in other respects, that an exception in this particular would have been a singular anomaly which nothing could justify but the plainest and most express provision. The decisions of reason harmonize on this subject, with the testimony of revelation; for, if we have an undoubted right to choose our own lawyer, or physician, how much more so, to elect the man to whom we shall intrust the care of our soul. If we should feel it hard to be obliged to take the medicines of the parish doctor whether we liked them or not, how much more oppressive is it, that we should be obliged to hear the opinions of the parish minister, who may have been appointed by the patron for other qualifications than those of a spiritual nature, and whose sentiments may be as much opposed to the doctrines of the gospel, as his conduct is to its holiness. What! are we to be obliged to look up to such a man as our spiritual instructor because some profligate, who has the living in his gift, chooses to introduce him to the vacant pulpit?

* Acts i. 21, 26.

† Acts vi.

V. A Christian church with its office bearers, is complete within itself, for the observance of divine ordinances, and the exercise of discipline ; and is subject to no authority or tribunal on earth. This is the Congregational or Independent form of church government, and it is thus denominated, to distinguish it from the Episcopal, or the government of a bishop, and from the Presbyterian, or the government of the churches by the authority of their assembled pastors and elders. No trace of any foreign control over a church of Christ, can be found in the New Testament, except such as was exercised by the apostles as the representatives of Jesus Christ.

* Acts xv. 23.

VI. Such a church is bound by the authority of Christ in their associated capacity, to observe all the institutes, to obey all the commands, and to cherish all the dispositions which relate to their social union, in the time, order, and manner in which they are enjoined by Christ Jesus. They are to assemble in public on the first day of the week for prayer, praise, hearing the Scriptures read and expounded, celebrating the Lord's supper, and exercising mutual affection. They are also bound by divine authority to maintain the purity of the church, by receiving only such as give evidence of true faith, and by excluding from their communion all those whose life is opposed to the doctrine which is according to godliness. They are to live in the exercise of mutual submission and brotherly love, and ever to consider themselves amenable to the tribunal of Christ, for their conduct in their church capacity.

Such is a very concise view of the nature of a Christian church.

Hence what might be termed the general principles of the New Testament on this topic, are, the all-sufficiency and exclusive authority of the Scriptures as a rule of faith and practice in matters of religion;—the consequent denial of the right of legislatures and ecclesiastical conventions to impose any rights, ceremonies, observances, or interpretations of the Word of God, upon our belief or practice;—the unlimited and inalienable right of every man to expound the Word of God for himself, and to worship his Maker in that place and manner which he deems to be most accordant with the directions of the Bible;—the utter impropriety of any alliance or incorporation of the church of Christ with the governments or the kingdoms of this world;—the duty of every Christian to oppose the authority which would attempt to fetter his conscience with obligations to religious observances not enjoined by Christ. These are general principles which should lead the thinking Christian to separate from all national establishments of religion whatever.

It is not enough to plead the authority of example, or of mere feeling, as a reason for any religious service. These are insufficient pilots on the troubled ocean of theological opinion, where opposing currents, stormy winds, and concealed rocks, endanger the safety of the voyager to eternity. Our compass is the word of God, reason must be the steersman at the helm to guide the vessel by the direction of the needle, and that mariner is accountable for the consequences, who is too ignorant or too indolent to examine his course.

Away with that morbid insensibility which exclaims, "It is of no consequence to what church or denomination a man belongs, provided he be a Christian." Such a spirit is a conspiracy against the throne of truth, and is the first step towards a complete abandonment of the importance of right sentiments. Admitting that error is to be measured by a graduated scale, who will undertake to fix upon the point where harmless mistakes end and mischievous ones begin. Every thing relating to religion is of consequence. In the temple of truth not only the foundation is to be valued and defended, but every point and every pinnacle.

It does not necessarily follow that an inquiry into the grounds of our conduct should imbitter our temper. The mist of passion obscures the splendour of truth, as much as fogs do the effulgence of the solar orb. Let us contend earnestly for right principles, but let it be in the exercise of right feelings. Let us hold the truth in love. Then do our sentiments appear to greatest advantage, and like gems set in gold, when they are supported by a spirit of Christian charity.

“O divine love! the sweet harmony of souls! the music of angels! the joy of God's own heart! the very darling of his bosom! the source of true happiness! the pure quintessence of heaven! that which reconciles the jarring principles of the world, and makes them all chime together! that which melts men's hearts into one another! See how St. Paul describes it, and it cannot choose but enamour your affections towards it;—“Love envieth not, it is not puffed up, it doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.” I may add, it is the best natured thing, the best complexioned thing in the world. Let us express this sweet harmonious affection in these jarring times; that so, if it be possible, we may tune the world into better music. Especially in matters of religion, let us strive with all meekness to instruct and convince one another. Let us endeavour to promote the gospel of peace, the dove-like gospel, with a dove-like spirit. This was the way, by which the gospel at first was propagated in the world. “Christ did not cry, nor lift up his voice in the streets; a bruised reed he did not break, and the smoking flax he did not quench; and yet he brought forth judgment unto victory." He whispered the gospel to us from mount Sion, in a still voice; and yet the sound thereof went out quickly throughout all the earth. The gospel at first came down upon the world gently and softly, like the dew on Gideon's fleece; and yet it quickly penetrated through it; and doubtless, this is still the most effectual way to promote it farther. Sweetness and ingenuity will more command men's minds, than passion, sourness, and severity; as the soft pillow sooner breaks the flint than the hardest marble. Let us "follow truth in love;" and of the two indeed, be contented rather to miss of the conveying a speculative truth, than to part with love. When we would convince men of any error by the strength of truth, let us withal pour the sweet balm of love upon their heads. Truth and love are two of the most powerful things in the world; and when they both go together, they cannot easily be withstood. The golden beams of truth, and the silken cords of love, twisted together, will draw men on with a sweet violence, whether they will or no.

"Let us take heed we do not sometimes call that zeal for God and his gospel, which is nothing else but our own tempestuous and stormy passion. True zeal is a sweet, heavenly, and gentle flame, which maketh us active for God, but always within the sphere of love. It never calls for fire from heaven to consume those that differ a little from us in their apprehensions. It is like that kind of lightning, (which the philosophers speak of) that melts the sword within, but singeth not the scabbard: it strives to save the soul, but hurteth not the body. True zeal is a loving thing, and makes us always active to edification, and not to destruction. If we keep the fire of zeal within the chimney, in its own proper place, it never doth any hurt; it only warmeth, quickeneth, and enliveneth us; but if once we let it break out, and catch hold of the thatch of our flesh, and kindle our corrupt nature, and set the house of our body on fire, it is no longer zeal, it is no heavenly fire, it is a most destructive and devouring thing. True zeal is an ignis lambens, a soft and gentle flame, that will not scorch one's hand; it is no predatory or voracious thing; but carnal and fleshly zeal is like the spirit of gunpowder set on fire, that tears and blows up all that stands before it. True zeal is like the vital heat in us that we live upon, which we never feel to be angry or troublesome; but though it gently feed upon the radical oil within us, that sweet balsam of our natural moisture, yet it lives lovingly with it, and maintains that by which it is fed: but that other furious and distempered zeal, is nothing else but a fever in the soul.

To conclude, we may learn what kind of zeal it is, that we should make use of in promoting the gospel, by an emblem of God's own, given us in the Scripture, those fiery tongues, that upon the day of Pentecost sat upon the Apostles ; which sure were harmless flames, for we cannot read that they did any hurt, or that they did so much as singe an hair of their heads."*

* Cudworth's Sermon before the House of Commons, 1647.

CHAPTER II.

ON THE NATURE AND DESIGN OF CHURCH FELLOWSHIP.

I. CHURCH fellowship is the exercise of the social principle in matters of religion, and in obedience to the authority of Christ.

Many persons seem to imagine that the only end and object of church fellowship, is the participation of the Lord's supper. Hence they attach no other idea to a church, than a company of Christians going together to the sacramental table; who have nothing to do with each other, till they arrive there, and whose reciprocal duties end where they begin. The observance of the Lord's supper it is confessed is one design and exercise of fellowship; but it is not the only one. Man is a social being, by which we mean that he instinctively seeks the company of his fellows; is capable of enjoying their society, and derives from their communion no small portion of his improvement and felicity. The aphorism of Solomon is as just as it is beautiful,—“As iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." Social bliss was the finish of paradisaical happiness; its influence has survived the shock of our apostasy, and will be felt amidst the felicities of the heavenly state. It is not matter of surprise, therefore, that the Lord Jesus should recognise the social principle in the arrangements of his wise and merciful economy. He might have left his people unconnected by any visible social bond, or at best with no other guide to each other than the natural workings and affinities of the human bosom. Instead of this, however, he has by explicit authority grafted the duties of his religion upon the propensities of our social nature. The identifying law of Christ's kingdom is love to one another; and in order that this love may be more perfect in its exercise, we are united in visible communion. When therefore we join a Christian church, we enter a society of believers, for the purpose of giving and receiving every suitable expression of mutual love. We then associate ourselves with those towards whom we are to cherish, in consequence of a common relationship, the kindest emotions. We are not only to worship with them in the same place, not only to sit with them at the same sacramental board, but we are to consider ourselves as one of their fellowship, to identify our best feelings with theirs, and in all things to consider ourselves members one of another. Our fellowship is not intended for, nor is it to be expressed by, any one exclusive act; but it is to extend itself to every possible way of having communion with each other. We are to rejoice together in the common salvation; and to bring forth together the fruits of a like precious faith. Dr. Watts has very beautifully expressed the feelings which every church member who understands his relationship, constantly recognises.

“ My soul shall pray for Zion still,
While life or breath remains;
There my best friends, my kindred dwell,
There God my Saviour reigns.”

This exercise of the social principle is conducted with direct reference to the authority of Christ. He who is our Lord has commanded it. It is his will that his people should not live solitarily and unconnected, but in visible association. To the question, therefore, Why are you a church member?—the first answer must be, because Jesus Christ has commanded it. Independently of the advantages arising from this practice, the true ground of it is the authority of our divine Lord. It is not only a privilege which he has permitted us to enjoy, but a duty which he has commanded us to perform. If we were unable to perceive its advantages, it would still be our duty to comply with it. Church fellowship is no less a duty than the observance of the first day Sabbath, as the same reasons may be advanced for the one as for the other.

From not viewing it in this light it is, that so many refuse to join themselves to the church; they consider membership merely in the light of a privilege, which it is at their option to receive or refuse. This is a very great and a very injurious error. If a believer remain without visible connexion with some christian society, he is guilty of direct disobedience against his rightful Lord.

II. Fellowship is the instituted way of making a public profession of the faith and hope of the gospel.

A man may hold the opinions and approve the practices of some voluntary worldly society; but until he has united himself with it, he is not considered either by its members or the public, as one of their number. His actually joining himself to them according to the established usage, is his profession. Thus a man may be a sincere believer of the gospel, and so far as respects his own private conduct, an exemplary example of genuine piety; but until he has connected himself with a christian church, he has not professed himself to be a Christian. It is by that act he declares to the world his faith and hope as a believer in Christ. It is thus he virtually says, "I receive the opinions, possess the dispositions, submit to the obligations, and observe the practices of the church of God with which I now connect myself." Jesus Christ has made it our duty not only to receive his truth into our hearts, but to confess him before men; and it is a duty on which very considerable stress is laid. This is to be done, not in any ostentatious way, but by joining ourselves to his people: which is a confession, that both the church and the world clearly understand. Hence it is apparent, that church membership is no trifling matter, since it is calling heaven, earth, and hell, to witness our solemn declaration of submission to the authority of Christ. It is saying in the hearing of more worlds than one, "I am a Christian."

III. It is the visible bond of union with the disciples of Jesus.

Christians are not only to be united, but to exhibit their union. Their oneness of sentiment, of affection, of purpose, is to be seen. We are not only to love one another, but our love is to be known, which is impossible without membership. In its collective capacity, a church concentrates, as in a focus, the light and love that exist in her individual members. Without being combined in a visible union, its splendour would be only as the dim and scattered light which was diffused over the chaos in the twilight of creation, while the fellowship of the saints is the same light gathered up and embodied in the solar orb. We are indeed united in spirit with the church of Christ, from the moment we have believed his gospel ; but our union is neither expressed nor recognised, until we have joined it in the usual way. We are citizens in feeling and intention, but not yet known from enemies, aliens, and spies. Membership, therefore, is the bond of visible union with the brethren in Christ.

IV. It is an explicit declaration of our determination to submit to the government and discipline of the church.

Every society has laws for the regulation of its affairs. Without these it could not exist ; and to which every member professes, at the time of his entrance, his determination to submit. The church of the Redeemer has in like manner its social rules, which respect the members in their associated capacity. We are therefore not only amenable to the direct authority of Christ, but also to that authority expressed by the voice of the church ; we must submit to all its regulations, observe all its injunctions, support its decisions, or we can no longer remain in its communion. If we are called before it, we must appear ; if required to explain any part of our conduct, we must comply ; if censured, we must submit. We are in no case haughtily to exclaim, "What is the church, that I should obey it? to my own master I stand or fall."

Our act of joining the society is an explicit declaration of our willingness to submit to the laws by which it is governed. We can voluntarily secede when there is just occasion, or in case of a false decision, we can mildly protest; but as long as we continue members we must submit, for our very membership professes and requires it.

V. It is to exhibit upon a smaller scale that sublime and glorious union and communion which subsist, not only between all real Christians of every country, name, and age, but between the whole redeemed church and their Divine Head.

Passages of a very striking import speak of this most comprehensive confederation.—“That in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; even in him.” Ephes. i. 10. “There is one body and one spirit.” Ephes. iv. 4. “That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.” 1 John i. 3. From these passages we learn that the aggregate of believers, united to Jesus Christ, and through him to the Father, form one vast harmonious fellowship of holiness and benevolence. They are united in the same pursuit, which is the divine glory;

in the same means for the attainment of that object, which is the salvation of the soul. The church universal will ever remain the one grand monument on which are recorded all the praises of the living God. Of this general assembly every particular society is the miniature resemblance. By its public worship, its beautiful subordination, its mutual affection, its truth, its holiness, its peace, it is an exhibition to the world of that fellowship which has God in Christ for its head, all believers for its members, heaven for its temple, and eternity for its duration ; while every time it assembles for worship, it shows forth the unity of the church, and the communion of saints.

CHAPTER III.

THE PRIVILEGES OF MEMBERSHIP.

I. THE participation of the Lord's supper.

That a reception of the appointed memorials of the Saviour's dying love, is indeed a privilege, requires no proof. As creatures, whose minds are instructed and whose hearts are impressed through the medium of our senses, how affecting are the emblems of the body and blood of Christ. Enough of resemblance may be observed by the fancy between the sign and the thing signified to aid the exercise of the affections, while enough of simplicity remains to prevent the excursions of the imagination from interfering with the more sublime and scriptural operations of our faith. That sacramental seasons are commonly the most happy and most profitable which a believer ever spends amongst the means of grace, is a fact not to be denied. It is no wonder that it should be so. It is at the sacred supper that the attention is more powerfully arrested and fixed, and the heart impressed and affected. It is there, that the scheme of redeeming mercy seems peculiarly to expand upon the understanding, and to excite the emotions of the bosom in a degree almost unknown elsewhere. It is there that the glory of the divine character has been most clearly discovered by our mind; there, that Jesus has unfolded to us the wonders of his mediation; and there, that the eternal Spirit has descended into our souls, in the most munificent communications of his sanctifying and consoling influence. How have our icy hearts there melted beneath the ardour of celestial love, and flowed down in streams of godly sorrow. How have our grovelling earthly minds soared on the wings of faith and hope, till we have lost sight of earthly scenes and sounds, amidst the glory of such as are divine. It is there, that we have felt ourselves crucified with Christ, and have risen with him into newness of life. It is there, that brotherly love has glowed with its most perfect fervour, and the communion of saints has yielded its most precious delights. Happier hours than those which have been there spent, we never expect to know in this world. They have left a relish and a fragrance upon the mind; the remembrance of them is sweet, and the anticipation of their return is amongst the brightest hopes we have this side the veil.

II. Another privilege connected with membership is the right of assisting in the choice of a pastor, in the election of deacons, and in the admission and exclusion of members.

It must surely be accounted no inconsiderable privilege to have a voice in the election of an individual on whose ministrations so much of our own spiritual welfare, and that of our families depends; nor is it a light thing to be admitted to a participation of the other business connected with, and arising from, the history of a church.

III. A church member has the advantage of pastoral oversight and supplication.

“They watch for your souls,” said the apostle to the ancient Christians, when speaking of their pastors; evidently implying that it was a great privilege to be the subjects of such inspection. A faithful friend that will instruct, warn, comfort, or reprove, as circumstances may require, is a great treasure; and such an one a Christian will find, or ought to find, in his minister. In him he has a right to expect a steady, active, and vigilant guardian of his eternal interests. One who will follow the individuals of his charge as far as can be, through all their spiritual career, comforting them when in distress, rousing them when lukewarm, reproofing them when their conduct needs rebuke, lending his ear to their every complaint, and opening his heart to receive their every grief. A faithful pastor will consider himself as the guide and the shield of the souls committed to his care. A shepherd to provide for their wants, a watchman to observe the approach of their dangers. He will visit them in the afflictions which attend their pilgrimage ; will hasten to their bedside when the sorrows of death encompass them ; will disclose to the eye of faith the visions of immortality, which irradiate the dark valley itself ; and will never cease his solicitude until the portals of heaven have closed upon their disembodied spirits.

In addition to this, the pastor bears the church in the arms of his affection, and presents them in his prayers before the throne of grace. Like the high priest of the Jews, he approaches the mercy seat, not with the names of the people merely engraven upon his breastplate, but written upon his heart. Nor does he confine himself to general supplications for the society in the aggregate ; its individual members, in their separate capacity and peculiar circumstances, are often the subjects of his intercession before the fountain of life. As he takes a deep interest in their personal, no less than in their collective capacity, he expresses his concern by definite and special supplication. Not only are sermons composed, but prayers presented, which are adapted to the various cases of his flock. The afflicted, the backsliding, the tempted, the novice, are all in turn remembered in his holiest moments before

God. Nor can any of these individuals say to which they are most indebted, to his labours in the pulpit, or to his supplications in the closet; for if "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much," we certainly may believe that the entreaty of the righteous minister is not less availing.

IV. The watchfulness, sympathy, and prayers of the church are no inconsiderable privilege of membership.

In what way these duties should be performed will be matter of consideration hereafter; and therefore we shall not enter minutely into the subject now, any farther than to show how great a mercy it is to enjoy an interest in the affection and the intercession of a Christian society. We are commanded to exhort one another daily; and amidst such temptations, such weakness, such corruptions as ours, is it not an unspeakable mercy to be surrounded by those who will watch over and assist us? With every help, how hard a thing is it to be a consistent Christian; how difficult to maintain the purity and vigour of true godliness; how often do our steps slip, and our exertions relax; and sometimes through the deceitfulness of the human heart others may perceive our danger before we ourselves are aware of its existence. It may often be said of us as of Israel of old, "Strangers have devoured his strength, yet he knoweth it not ; grey hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth it not." In such cases, none can estimate the value of those Christian friends, who with faithful love will remind us of our danger and affectionately admonish us. How inestimable the privilege of having those who will tenderly reprove us, and draw us back with the cords of a man and the bands of love. In the case of our soul's salvation more than worlds are at stake ; and he who will give himself the trouble to admonish us and exhort us to diligence, performs a service of infinite value, for which, if we improve by it, we shall offer him our gratitude in eternity.

And then think of the value of Christian sympathy. How consolatory is it in our troubles to recollect, that there are those who are thinking of our situation and pitying our distress. Even when they visit us not, they are probably talking to each other about us. We have their affectionate remembrance, their tenderest interest.

Nor are their prayers withheld when they meet in the temple, or when they retire to the closet. When they join with one accord in supplication, and when they pray to their Father in secret, they mention their suffering brother or sister, to Him who loveth the church. Ah ! how often has the troubled believer felt it lighten his load, and irradiate his gloom, as he groaned away the hour when the church was assembled, to believe that they were thinking of him, and blessing him with their prayers. It has been as if an angel were despatched to inform him that supplication was being made for him, and that therefore he ought to dry up his tears. Yes, and the sweet remembrance has in some cases made the tears forget to fall, and the half uttered groan to die away with silent submission. He has laid down upon his restless couch again, and it seemed as if it had been smoothed afresh for him by some viewless agent; and so it has, for God has heard the prayers of the church on his behalf, and has made "all his bed in his sickness."

D

CHAPTER IV.

THE GENERAL DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS IN THEIR INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY.

I. THEY should seek to acquire clear and enlarged views of divine truth.

It is a fact which cannot be questioned, that a very large proportion of those whom we believe to be real Christians, are mere babes in knowledge. They have just enough instruction to know that they are sinners, and that salvation is all of grace through Christ Jesus. But ask them to state, prove, and defend, in a scriptural manner, any one of the leading doctrines of the gospel, and you would immediately discover, how contracted is their view, and how feeble is their perception of divine truth. Instead of walking amidst the splendid light and varied scenery of revelation, with the confidence and joy of men whose vision is clear and strong, they are groping along with the fear and hesitation of those who are partially blind. This, in most cases, is their fault, and not their misfortune merely. We are commanded to grow in knowledge; and the Apostle in the following very severe language, reprov'd the believing Hebrews for their ignorance.—“When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again, which be the first principles of the oracles of God.” After this he exhorts them to leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and go on to perfection. How earnestly in other parts of his writings, did he supplicate for the churches, an increase of their religious knowledge. Eph. i. 17, 18. Colos. i. 9. It is very common for ministers to complain that they are almost afraid to ascend to the loftier parts of revealed truth, lest a great portion of their hearers should be unable to follow them, and reproach them with ascending to barren and almost inaccessible summits.

The causes of this deficiency of religious knowledge in our members, are numerous and various. In many cases the want of a religious education contributes to it. Not a few of them are brought in from the world, when they are far advanced in life. There is with many, a more culpable cause; I mean a systematic neglect of the subject. “What,” they exclaim, “will head knowledge do for us; we are for experience; experience is every thing in religion.” What kind of experience that is which is not founded on knowledge, I am at a loss to conceive. With such people, ignorance appears to be the mother of devotion. It should be recollected that it is in the spiritual world, as it is in the natural; the seed of the kingdom is sown in the light, and light is essential to every stage of its growth. If that be not right knowledge, which does not produce feeling, certainly that is not right feeling which is not produced by knowledge. They who have only head knowledge, dwell in the frigid zone of christianity; and they who have only feeling, occupy the torrid zone. The former are frozen amidst mere cold and heartless speculation; the latter are scorched amidst wild fanaticism.

How much more real enjoyment of the truth is possessed by him who clearly and comprehensively understands it; and how much more useful is he likely to be in communicating instruction, than the individual who barely understands first principles. Every professing Christian, at least all those who have leisure for reading, should endeavour to unite the knowledge of a good theologian, with the experience of a real believer.

In order to this, let Christians set apart time not only for reading, but studying the scriptures; let them read theological books which explain and prove the doctrines of the gospel; let them commit to memory the admirable definitions of these doctrines contained in the Assembly's Shorter Catechism; let them attend upon the preaching of the word with a view not only to be comforted, but to be instructed. The exclusive object for which some persons hear sermons, is to obtain a little comfort. They sit waiting and watching for some sweet and savoury assurance, some well known hacknied consolatory topic, some lively appeal to the experience, and until this comes, they think lightly of every thing else. The minister may have given the clearest elucidation of some dark and doubtful passage, the most profound discussion of some sublime doctrine, the most masterly defence of some disputed truth ; but to the mere comfort hunters, all this is nothing else than the husk or the shell, which is to be cracked and thrown away for the kernel of a little Christian experience. From such sermons they go home, with hungry and cheerless appetites, complaining that they have found it a lost opportunity.

Let me not be mistaken. Comfort ought to be sought for, but always through the medium of knowledge. The best warmth is that which comes not from ardent spirits, but from the sun, which sends his heat to the frame, in those beams which convey light to the eye. The fact is, that some people's religion is of that weak unhealthy kind, which is supported only by elixirs and cordials.

After all, I am constrained to confess, that the darkness which rests upon the mind of the church member, is the result in some cases, of that cloudiness which envelopes the mind of the pastor; if there is ignorance in the pew, it is because there is so little knowledge in the pulpit. When the preacher dwells on nothing but a few hacknied common place topics of an experimental or consolatory nature; when all the varied and sublime parts of revealed truth are neglected for one unceasing round of beaten subjects; when a text is selected from time to time which requires no study to understand, no ability to expound; when nothing is heard from one Sabbath to another, but the same sentiments in the same words, until the introduction of a new or original conception would startle the congregation almost as much as the entrance of a spectre; who can wonder, if, under such circumstances, the congregation should grow tired of their preacher; or if such drowsy tinklings should lull the fold, till with their shepherd they sink to the slumbers of indifference, amidst the thickening gloom of religious ignorance?

II. Advancement in religion is incumbent on every professing Christian.

As the usual mode of admission to our churches, subjects their members to a scrutiny of their conduct, it is considered by many as a kind of ordeal, which being passed with success, remits them from any solicitude about farther improvement. A kind of indelible character is then impressed upon them, which is susceptible of neither increase nor improvement. I do not mean to say that they come deliberately to such a conclusion, or that they are aware of any such opinion being in their mind ; but having passed their trials with honour, they insensibly acquire the idea, that now they are professed and acknowledged Christians, that their religion is admitted to be genuine, that they are put amongst the disciples, and therefore the same anxiety is no longer necessary. Often and often have we seen, especially in the case of young persons, that the act of joining the church, has in some measure diminished the earnestness with which their minds were formerly directed to the subject of religion. They were growing rapidly as babes in Christ, till the consciousness of being a church member, and acknowledged a Christian, either by generating pride, or relaxing diligence, has paralyzed their piety, arrested their growth, and left them dwarfs in grace for ever after.

We should consider that religion is not an abstract thing of times, places, and ceremonies ; nor is the religious character formed by any single compliance, however public or however solemn. If it were admitted that regeneration is an instantaneous change, in which the whole character of a child of God is formed at once, this will not apply to membership. Instead of considering our union with the church as the goal of our religious career, where improvement may cease and progress be stopped, we should view it as but the very starting point, from whence we are to forget the things that are behind, and press towards the mark for the prize of our high calling. From that moment we are under more solemn obligations than ever to grow in grace, inasmuch as the means of growth are increased. Till then, we have been as trees growing in obscurity without the aid of human culture; but when we associate with a church, we are transplanted into a garden, and have the advantage of the gardener's care, and should therefore abound more than ever in all the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory of God.

III. Consistency in their conduct, as professing Christians, is a most obvious and pressing obligation of church members.

If this page was written in tears, printed in blood, enclosed in black lines, and read with groanings that could not be uttered, even this would be too feeble an expression of the author's grief for that want of Christian consistency, which it has been his calamity to witness in what is called the religious world, and which renders it so necessary for him to insist on the importance of uniform piety. The want of this in the conduct of professing Christians, has done more harm to Christianity than all the ravings of infidelity from the time of Cain to the death Paine. This sacred and deathless cause lifts her venerable form bearing the scars of many a wound, not inflicted by arrows plumed with the pen of Voltaire or Hume ; oh, no, such weapons bounded from her bosom, as from a shield of triple brass, and dropped at her feet to be deposited with the spoils of her victories ; but the darts that lacerated her, and left the memorials of their mischief upon her form, were the vices and follies of her votaries. O Christians, will ye scourge and lacerate her, will ye array her in the costume of scorn, and leading her forth bleeding and dejected to meet her enemies in the gate, proclaim, "Behold, an impostor !" Will ye assist to raise the clamour which infidel philosophers endeavoured to excite, and stir up the multitude to exclaim, "Away with her, away with her ! Crucify her, crucify her !" Tremble at the thought. If Christianity ever die, it will not be in the field of conflict, by the power of her enemies, but like Cesar in the capitol, by the hand of her friends ; and which of us would like to meet the look of her expiring eye, or the mild reproach of her faltering tongue, "What, thou my son !" But she cannot die ; wounded she may be, and has been ; but the memorials of her injury are the proofs of her immortality, and proclaim her to be of heavenly origin : like the fabled scars of the heathen gods of Greece and Rome, her wounds demonstrably show that a divinity sustained her.

Still, however, the inconsistencies of professing Christians may limit her reign, although they cannot destroy her existence. By these things sinners are hardened in their courses, the access to life is rendered more difficult, while the avenues of eternal death are made more wide and easy. That man, whose conduct opposes his profession, may be certainly arraigned for the crime of murder. Let him not go quietly to his pillow as if blood guiltiness were not upon his conscience, for it is there, and a voice is continually saying to him, "Thy brother's blood crieth to me from the ground." He has not slain the body of a fellow mortal, but has been accessory to the death of souls. Some that sought for an apology for their sins, an opiate for their consciences, found it in his misconduct.

I have no need to specify the duties included in the general idea of consistency ; these are known well enough. The apostle's beautiful and comprehensive admonition is a sufficient directory. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

I particularly exhort church members to be aware of what might be denominated the minor breaches of consistency. We are not to conclude that nothing breaks the uniformity of our character, but what subjects us to the discipline of the church. Overt acts of immorality are comparatively rare, while ten thousand instances of less delinquency, such as the church cannot take cognizance of, are continually occurring in the conduct of Christians, to the disgrace of religion and the injury of men's souls. Those things are seen in us, which would pass unnoticed in others who make no profession of religion; just as a spot which would be lost on canvass, is visible on cambric. A Christian's character is like polished steel, which may have its lustre destroyed, not only by broad spots of rust, but by an assemblage of innumerable specks.

More scandals have occurred in the Christian church from dishonourable pecuniary transactions than from any other source. Instances of drunkenness, dishonesty, and imposition, are seldom, compared with those of an artful, imposing, dishonest way of conducting business. The world is a dangerous and successful foe to grace; and although every church member professes himself to be through faith a conqueror, how many by their over-reaching, ungenerous conduct, prove that they are yet enslaved by this sordid enemy. Some there are who betray their Master for a less sum than that which Judas set upon his blood; and for a tithe of thirty pieces of silver, will be guilty of an action which they must know, at the time, will provoke the severest invective and bitterest sarcasm against all religion.

IV. Church members should excel in the manifestation of the Christian temper.

The mind which was in Christ Jesus, should be in them. They should consider his character as the model of their own; and be conspicuous for their poverty of spirit, meekness, gentleness, and love. They should seek a large portion of the "wisdom which cometh from above; which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy." It is matter of surprise and regret, that many persons seem to think that religion has nothing to do with the temper; and that provided they are free from gross sins, and have lively feelings in devotional exercises, they may be as petulant, irritable, and implacable as they please. This is a dreadful error, and has done great mischief to the cause of God. A sour, ill-natured Christian, if I may describe him by a resemblance as fabulous as the centaurs, is like a lamb with a dog's head, a dove with a vulture's beak, a rose with leaves of nettles. If there be any one word which above all others should describe a Christian's character, it is that which represents his divine Father; and as it is said, God is love, so should it be also affirmed, a Christian is love—love embodied, an incarnation of love. His words, conduct, nay, his very looks, should be so many expressions of love.

V. Church members should be very eminent for a right discharge of all their social duties.

The apostles have given this great importance by the frequency with which they have introduced it.* Christianity, so far from loosening the bands of society, adds to them incredible strength and firmness, by motives drawn from the eternal world. One part of the design of revelation is to purify and strengthen the social principle, and carry it to its greatest elevation and perfection.

A good Christian, and yet a bad husband, father, brother, neighbour, or subject, is an anomaly which the world never yet beheld. Professing Christians should excel all others in the beauties of social virtue. Religion should give additional tenderness to the conjugal relationship; greater love to the parent, and obedience to the child; fresh kindness to the master, and diligence to the servant. The world should look to the church with this conviction, "Well, if social virtue were driven from every other portion of society, it would find an asylum, and be cherished with care, upon the heights of Zion." Then will religion have attained its highest credit upon earth, when it shall be admitted by universal consent, that to say a man is a Christian, is an indisputable testimony to his excellence in all the relations he bears to society.

* Ephes. v. 22, vi. 1—9. Col. iii. 18. 1 Tim. vi. 1—4. 1 Pet. iii. 1, 2. 1 Pet. ii. 18.

VI. There are duties to be discharged in reference to the world.

By the world, I mean all those of every party and denomination who are destitute of true godliness. The apostle has summed up our obligations towards them under the comprehensive injunction, "Walk in wisdom towards them which are without."* In another place, we are commanded to "Let our light shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father which is in heaven."† We are also exhorted "to have our conversation honest (this word signifies beautiful, honourable) amongst the Gentiles."‡ In order to comply with this, we must act consistently with our profession; excel in the observance of social duties; abound in mercy; bear a prudent testimony against evil practices; be most punctiliously exact in fulfilling all our engagements, and performing all our promises; live in a most peaceable and neighbourly manner; perform every office of kindness and charity which can please or benefit; and set an example of industry, honesty, and generosity.

* Col. iv. 5.

† Matt. v. 16.

‡ 1 Pet. ii. 12.

VII. We should as professing Christians be exemplary in our obedience to the civil magistrate.

The Scriptures which enjoin this are too numerous to be quoted at length.* One only shall be given, but that is a very striking one. "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God; the powers that be, are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." This injunction must of course be understood as relating to matters purely civil; or in other words to those laws which are not in opposition to the spirit and letter of divine revelation. If rulers enjoin any thing which is condemned by the word of truth, it is the duty of a Christian, without hesitation, and at all hazards, to act upon the principles, and follow the example of the apostles, and "obey God rather than man."

* Rom xiii. 1, 2. Acts xxiii. 5. Titus iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14. 1 Tim. ii. 1—3.

God forbid I should teach a doctrine so pernicious as that one of the first efforts of true piety when it enters the soul is to extinguish the love of civil liberty ; or that having broken the fetters of vice, it immediately bows the regenerated soul into submission to the yoke of despotism. No such thing ; religion is a noble, and sublime, and elevating principle. It expands, not contracts the mind ; it is not a spirit of bondage which makes its possessor again to fear, but it is a spirit of power, and of a sound mind ; it lifts the soul from the dust, and does not chain it there ; it has raised a noble army of martyrs, every one of whose millions was a hero that defied the tyrant's rage, and spurned his yoke ; religion therefore is no friend of slavery, nor can any of its precepts be quoted by the tyrant as an excuse for his trampling on the liberties of mankind.

Avowing thus much, and admitting that the most spiritual Christian may take an interest, and ought to take an interest in public affairs ; nay, that he ought to maintain a ceaseless jealousy over the constitution and freedom of his country, still I contend that a constant, and noisy, and factious meddling in party politics, is as injurious to his own personal religion, as it is to the interest of piety in general. We do not cease to be citizens, when we become Christians ; but we are in danger of ceasing to be Christians, when we become politicians. It is with politics as with money ; it is not the temperate use, but the immoderate love of it, that is the root of all evil. Thousands of professors of religion have made shipwreck of their faith and a good conscience, during the tempests of political agitation ; let us then, as we value our lives, be cautious how we embark on this stormy and troubled ocean.

There is one way in which many Christians offend against the laws of their country without scruple, and without remorse ; I mean by endeavouring to evade the payment of taxes. Had there been no Christian statute to condemn this practice, the general principles of reason would be quite sufficient to prove its criminality. But the New Testament has added the authority of revelation to the dictates of reason ; and thus made it a sin against God, no less than a crime against society, to defraud the revenue. "Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's ; tribute to whom tribute is due, and custom to whom custom," is the authoritative language of St. Paul. This precept derives great force from the consideration that it was delivered at a time, and under a government, in which the taxes were not imposed by the people themselves, but by the arbitrary power of a despot. Certainly if, under these circumstances, it was the duty of a Christian to pay the tribute money, any effort which we make to evade it, must be additionally criminal, since we are taxed by the will of our representatives. The excuses usually made in justification of this practice, only serve to show how far even some good people may be imposed upon, by the deceitfulness of the human heart. Every time we have made a false return on the schedule which regulates our quota of taxation, or that we have purchased knowingly a contraband article of food, beverage, or dress, we have committed a fraud upon society, have assumed a power to dispense with the laws of our country, have violated the precepts of the New Testament, have brought the guilt of a complicated crime upon our conscience, and have subjected ourselves to the displeasure of God, and the discipline of his church.

CHAPTER V.

ON THE DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS TO THEIR PASTORS.

I. SUBMISSION to their just and scriptural authority.

It is readily admitted that the unscriptural, and therefore usurped domination of the priesthood is the root from whence arose the whole system of papal tyranny; which, springing up like a poison tree in the garden of the Lord, withered by its shadow, and blighted by its influence, almost every plant and flower of genuine christianity. It is matter of no regret, therefore, nor of surprise, if a ceaseless jealousy should be maintained by those who understand the principles of religious liberty, against the encroachments of pastoral authority. Priestly dominion, as it appears in the Vatican, is the most detestable and the most mischievous of all tyranny; but when it appears in the pastor of an independent church, divested at once of the elements of power and the trappings of majesty, the mere mimicry of authority, it is rather ridiculous than alarming, and bears no nearer resemblance to its prototype at Rome, than the little croaking, hopping animal of the pond, did to the ox of the field, which his pride led him to emulate, until he burst.

Still, however, there is authority belonging to the pastor ; for office without authority is a solecism. "Remember them that have the rule over you," said St. Paul to the Hebrews, xiii. 7. "Obey them that have the rule over you. Submit yourselves, for they watch for your souls," 17. "They addicted themselves to the ministry ; submit yourselves to such." 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 16. These are inspired injunctions, and they enjoin obedience and submission on Christian churches to their pastors. The authority of pastors, however, is not legislative or coercive, but simply declarative and executive. To define with precision its limits, is as difficult as to mark the boundaries of the several colours of the rainbow, or of light and darkness at the hour of twilight in the hemisphere. The minister is to command, yet he is not to "lord it over God's heritage." This is not the only case, in which the precise limits of authority are left undefined by the scriptures. The duties of the conjugal union are laid down in the same general manner : the husband is to rule and the wife to obey ; yet it is difficult to declare where in this instance authority and submission end. In each of these instances the union is founded on mutual love, confidence and esteem, and it might therefore be rationally supposed, that under these circumstances general terms are sufficient, and that there would arise no contests for power. If the people see that all the authority of their pastor is employed for their benefit, they will not be inclined to ascertain by measurement whether he has passed its limits. The very circumstance of his prerogative being thus undefined, should on the one hand make him afraid of extending it, and on the other, render his church cautious of diminishing it. It is my decided conviction, that in many of our churches, the pastor is depressed far below his just level. He is considered merely in the light of a speaking brother. He has no official distinction or authority. He may flatter like a sycophant, he may beg like a servant, he may woo like a lover ; but he is not permitted to enjoin like a ruler. His opinion is received with no deference, his person treated with no respect, and in the presence of some of his lay tyrants, if he say any thing at all, it must be somewhat similar to the ancient soothsayers, for he is only permitted to peep and mutter from the dust.

Those persons who are anxious to strip their pastors of all just elevation, cannot expect to derive much edification from their labours ; for instruction and advice, like substances falling to the earth, impress the mind with a momentum, proportionate to the height from which they descend.

II. Church members should treat their pastor with distinguishing honour, esteem, and love.

“Let the elders that rule well be accounted worthy of double honour, especially they that labour in the word and doctrine.”* 1 Tim. v. 17. “Know them that have the rule over you, and esteem them very highly in love, for their works’ sake.” 1 Thes. v. 11, 12. To prescribe in what way our love should express itself, is almost needless, as love is the most inventive passion of the heart, and will find or make a thousand opportunities for displaying its power. Love is also practical, as well as ingenious, and does not confine itself either to the speculations of the judgment or the feelings of the heart. It breathes in kind words, and lives in kind deeds. Where a minister is properly esteemed and lov-

* It is surprising to me that an attempt should have been made to found on no other basis than this passage, a double office of eldership in the church, and to establish a distinction between ruling and preaching elders, when nothing more can be fairly inferred from the passage, than that the apostles intended to show the whole design and duties of the elder’s office, and to pronounce him entitled to peculiar respect, who fulfilled them all, and who, to ruling well, added much diligence in preaching the word.

ed, there will be the greatest deference for his opinions, the most delicate attention to his comfort, a scrupulous respect for his character. Some people treat their minister as if he could feel nothing but blows. They are rude, uncourteous, churlish. Instead of this, let him see the most studious and constant care to promote his happiness and usefulness. When he is in sickness, visit him; in trouble, sympathise with him; when absent from home, take a kind interest in his family; when he returns, greet him with a smile; at the close of the labours of the Sabbath, let the deacons and leading members gather round him in the vestry, and not suffer him to retire from his scene of public labours without the reward of some tokens of their approbation, if it be only one friendly pressure of the hand. Let him see that his prayers, and sermons, and solicitude, render him dear to the hearts of his flock. It is astonishing what an influence is sometimes produced upon a minister's mind and comfort, even by the least expression of his people's regard. Of this we have a beautiful instance in the life of St. Paul. On that important journey to Rome, which was to decide the question of life or death, he appears to have felt a season of temporary depression when the imperial city presented itself to his view. In silent meditation he revolved, not without some degree of dismay, his approaching appeal to a tribunal from which he had nothing in the way of clemency to expect. For a little while the heroism of this exalted man was somewhat affected by his situation. At this juncture some of the Roman Christians, who had been apprized of his approach, came out as far as the Appii-forum, and the three taverns, to meet him, "whom, when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage." From that moment fears of Nero, of prison, and of death, all left him. He sprung forward with new ardour in his career, prepared to offer himself in sacrifice on the altar of martyrdom. If then the love of these brethren, who had travelled a few stages to meet St. Paul, produced so happy an effect upon the mind of this illustrious apostle, how certainly might the members of our churches calculate upon a similar influence being produced upon the hearts of their pastors, by even the smaller expressions of their affection.

III. Attendance upon their ministration, is another duty which church members owe their pastors.

This attendance should be constant, not occasional. Some of our members give unspeakable pain to their pastors by the irregularity of their visits to the house of God. A little inclemency of weather, or the slightest indisposition of body, is sure to render their seats vacant. Sometimes a still more guilty cause than this exists. Oh!

“Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon, lest the daughters of the Philistines triumph.” Many professors do not scruple to devote a part of the Sabbath to travelling. They do not probably set off upon a journey in the morning of the Sabbath, and travel all day, but they set off perhaps on Saturday evening, and arrive at home late on Sunday morning; or they leave home after tea on Sunday evening, and thus take only a part of the hallowed day from its destined purpose. This practice, it is to be feared, has much increased of late, and is become one of the prevailing sins of the religious world. Such persons deserve to be brought under the censures of the church.

Some persons are irregular in their attendance through the distance at which they live from their place of public worship. Oftentimes this is unavoidable; but it is a great inconsistency for professing Christians voluntarily to choose a residence which from its remoteness from the house of God, must often deprive them of the communion of the saints. Such a disposition to sacrifice spiritual privileges to mere temporal enjoyment, does not afford much evidence that religion is with them the one thing needful, or that they have the mind of David, who thought the threshold of the sanctuary was to be preferred to the saloon and the park of the palace.

Injurious as the practice necessarily must be to the individuals themselves, it is still more so to their servants and children.

In the families of the poor, and in others indeed where no servant is kept, the mother is detained from public worship far more than she ought to be, in consequence of her husband not taking his share of parental duty. Many fathers will suffer their wives to be kept from the sanctuary for weeks together, rather than take charge of their children, even for one part of the Sabbath. This is most unkind, and most unjust. A mother, it might be thought, has pain and toil enough already, without being called to suffer unnecessary privations in religious matters. That must be an unfeeling husband, who would not gladly afford an hour's rest and respite to his wife, on the day set apart for sacred repose.

Professing Christians should feel the obligations to attend week day services. Most ministers have often to complain, that they are half deserted on these occasions. Surely, with such hearts and amidst such circumstances as ours, it is too long to go from Sabbath to Sabbath without the aid of public worship. All persons have not the command of their own time; but in the case of those who have, the neglect is inexcusable, and argues a very low state of religion in the soul. And what shall be said of those members whom their pastor on his way to the house of God, either meets going to parties of pleasure, or sees in the very circles of gaiety.

A minister has a right to expect his members at the meetings for social prayer.* The Chris-

* Unfortunately for the interests of our prayer meetings, some brethren who lead our devotions are so outrageously long, that after enjoying the first half of their prayers, the congregation are anxiously waiting for the close of the other half. We are often prayed into a good frame, and then prayed out of it again by those who extend their supplications to the length of twenty or five and twenty minutes at a time. A prayer on these occasions should rarely exceed ten minutes. I do most earnestly recommend this to the consideration of those brethren who are in the habit of engaging in public prayer. Devotion ends when weariness begins. Brevity, fervour, and variety, are the qualities which all should seek. It is also to be regretted that the prayers are so much alike in the arrangement of their parts. Each individual seems to think it necessary that he should pursue a regular routine. How much more edifying would it be, if one were to confine himself to one topic, and the next were to enlarge on what the preceding one had omitted. If a person feels his mind impressed and drawn out by any particular subject, let him confine himself to that subject, and not suppose that his supplications will be unacceptable either to God or man because he has not brought in the sick, the church, the minister, the nation, the world, &c. &c. How affecting and impressive would it be to hear a tian that neglects these, betrays such an utter indifference to the interests of the church, and the comfort of the pastor, as well as so much lukewarmness in his own personal religion, as to be a fit subject for the exercise of discipline.

IV. Earnest prayer.

How often and how earnestly did the great apostle of the Gentiles repeat that sentence, which contained at once the authority of a command and the tenderness of a petition—"Brethren, pray for us." In another place, he ascribes his deliverance and preservation to the prayers of the churches—"You also helping together by prayer for us." 2 Cor. i. 11. Surely then if this illustrious man was dependent upon, and indebted to the prayers of Christians, how much more so the ordinary ministers of Christ! Pray then for your ministers; for the increase of their intellectual attainments, spiritual qualifications, and ministerial success. Pray for them in your private approaches to the throne of grace; pray for them at the family altar, and thus teach your servants and children to respect and love them. Prayer is a means of assisting a minister within brother sometimes confine his whole intercession to his minister's usefulness; sometimes to the church; sometimes to the spread of the gospel in the world. See a most admirable letter of Mr. Newton's on this subject in his Omicron.

the reach of all. They who can do nothing more, can pray. The sick, who cannot encourage their minister by their presence in the sanctuary, can bear him upon their hearts in their lonely chamber: the poor, who cannot add to his temporal comfort by pecuniary donations, can supplicate their God "to supply all his needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus:" the timid, who cannot approach to offer him the tribute of their gratitude, can pour their praises into the ear of Jehovah, and entreat him still to encourage the soul of his servant: the ignorant, who cannot hope to add one idea to the stock of his knowledge, can place him by prayer before the fountain of celestial radiance: even the dying, who can no longer busy themselves as aforetime for his interests, can gather up their remaining strength, and employ it in the way of prayer for their pastor.

Prayer, if it be sincere, always increases our affection for its object. We never feel even our dearest friends to be so dear, as when we have commended them to the goodness of God. It is the best extinguisher of enmity, and the best fuel for the flame of love. If some professing Christians were to take from the time they spend in praising their ministers, and others from that which they employ in blaming them, and both were to devote it to the act of praying for them, the former would find still more cause for admiration, and the latter far less reason for censure.

V. Members should encourage others to attend upon the ministry of their pastors.

Let us go up to the house of the Lord, is an invitation which they should often address to the people of the world, who either attend no place of worship at all, or where the truth is not preached. A minister cannot himself ask people to attend his place of worship, but those who are in the habit of hearing him can; and it is astonishing to what an extent the usefulness of private Christians may be carried in this way. I have received very many into the fellowship of the church under my care, who were first brought under the sound of the gospel by the kind solicitations of a pious neighbour. To draw away the hearers of one faithful preacher to another, is a despicable ambition—mere sectarian zeal; but to invite those who never hear the gospel to listen to the joyful sound, is an effort worthy the mind of an angel. Shall sinners invite one another to iniquity—to the brothel, the theatre, the tavern—and Christians not attempt to draw them to the house of God? This is one way in which every member, of every church, may be the means of doing great good; the rich, the poor, male and female, masters and servants, young and old, have all some acquaintance over whom they may exert their influence; and how can it be better employed than in attracting them to those places “Where streams of heavenly mercy flow,

And words of sweet salvation sound.”

VI. It is incumbent on church members to make known to their pastor any thing that occurs within the scope of their observation, or the course of their experience, relating to his church and congregation.

For instance, their own spiritual embarrassments, trials, temptations; the declensions, backslidings, and sins of others, which they imagine may have escaped his notice, and which they have first tried by their own personal efforts to remove. If they perceive any root of bitterness growing up, which they have not strength or skill enough to eradicate, it is then manifestly their duty to inform him of the circumstance. If they perceive any individual whose case has been overlooked, any one in circumstances which need sympathy or relief, any who are struggling with affliction, but are too modest or timid to disclose their situation; they should bring all such occurrences under his notice. Especially should they encourage any persons in the congregation who appear to be under religious concern; in such cases they should put forth all their tenderest solicitude to shelter and cherish these hopeful beginnings, and introduce the subjects of them to their minister. There are some Christians—but do they indeed deserve the name?—who would see all the process of conversion going on in the very next seat to theirs, and observe the fixed attention, the anxious look, the tearful eye, the serious deportment—and all this repeated one Sabbath after another—without the least possible interest, or ever exchanging a single syllable with the inquiring penitent! Shame, shame on such professors!! Can the love of Christ dwell in such cold and careless hearts? Can they have ever felt conviction of sin? How easy and how incumbent is it to introduce ourselves to such individuals; a word, a look, would be received with gratitude.

I am aware that the part of a member's duty, enforced under this division of the subject, requires extreme caution and delicacy, not to degenerate into a busy, meddling, officious disposition. All impertinent obtrusion, all fawning activity, should be carefully avoided by the people, and as carefully discouraged by the pastor.

VII. Zealous co-operation in all schemes of usefulness proposed by the pastor, whether for the benefit of their own society in particular, or the welfare of the church, and the world at large, is the duty of Christians.

This is an age of restless activity, practical benevolence, and progressive improvement. One scheme of benefit often contains the germs of many more. The love of innovation and the dread of it, are equally remote from true wisdom. Zeal, when guided by wisdom, is a noble element of character, and the source of incalculable good. A church ought always to stand ready to support any scheme which is proved to their judgment to be beneficial either to themselves or others. It is most disheartening to ministers to find all their efforts counteracted by that ignorance which can comprehend nothing strange, that bigotry which is attached to every thing old, that timidity which starts at every thing new, or that avarice which condemns every thing expensive. Usages and customs that are venerable for their antiquity, I admit, should not be touched by hot spirits and rude hands, lest in removing the sediment deposited by the stream of time at the base of the fabric, they should touch the foundation itself: But where the word of God is the line and the plummet; where this line is held by the hand of caution, and watched by the eye of wisdom; in such cases, innovation upon the customs of our churches is a blessing, and ought to receive the support of the people. It is a scandal to any Christian society, when the flame of ministerial zeal is allowed to burn, without enkindling a similar fire.

G

VIII. A most delicate and tender regard for the pastor's reputation.

A minister's character is the lock of his strength; and if once this be sacrificed, he is like Samson shorn of his hair, a poor, feeble, faltering creature, the pity of his friends and the derision of his enemies. I would not have bad ministers screened, nor would I have good ones maligned. When a preacher of righteousness has stood in the way of sinners, and walked in the counsel of the ungodly, he should never again open his lips in the great congregation, until his repentance is as notorious as his sin. But while his character is unsullied, his friends should preserve it with as much care against the tongue of the slanderer, as they would his life against the hand of the assassin.

When I consider the restless malignity of the great enemy of God and holiness, and add to this his subtlety and craft; when I consider how much his malice would be gratified, and his schemes promoted, by blackening the character of the ministers of the gospel; when I consider what a multitude of creatures there are who are his vassals, and under his influence, creatures so destitute of moral principle, and so filled with venomous spite against religion, as to be prepared to go any lengths in maligning the righteous, and especially their ministers, I can account for it on no other ground, than a special interposition of providence, that the reputation of Christian pastors is not more frequently attacked by slander, and destroyed by calumny. But probably we see in this as in other cases, that wise arrangement of Providence by which things of delicacy and consequence are preserved, by calling forth greater solicitude for their safety. Church members should therefore be tremblingly alive to the importance of defending their minister's character. They should neither expect to see him perfect, nor hunt after his imperfections. When they cannot but see his imperfections—imperfections which after all may be consistent with not only real, but eminent piety—they should not take pleasure in either magnifying or looking at them; but make all reasonable excuse for them, and endeavour to lose sight of his infirmities in his virtues, as they do the spots of the sun amidst the radiance with which they are surrounded. Let them not be the subject of conversation even between yourselves, much less before your children, servants, and the world. If you talk of his faults in derision, who will speak of his excellencies with admiration? Do not look at him with suspicion, but repose an honourable confidence in his character. Do not make him an offender for a word, and refuse to him that charity and candour of judgment, which would be granted to every one else. Do not magnify indiscretions into immoralities, and exact from him that absolute perfection, which in your own case you find to be unattainable. Beware of whispers, inuendoes, significant nods, and that slanderous silence, which is more defamatory than the broadest accusation.

Defend him against the groundless attacks of others. Never hear him spoken of with undeserved reproach, without indignantly repelling the shafts of calumny from the wittling that would make him ridiculous, the scorner that would render him contemptible, and the defamer that would brand him as immoral.

Especially guard against those creeping reptiles which infest our churches, and are perpetually insinuating that their ministers do not preach the gospel, merely because they do not incessantly repeat the same truths in the same words; because they do not allegorize and spiritualize all the facts of the Old Testament, until they have found as much gospel in the horses of Pharaoh's chariot as they can in St. Paul's epistles; and because they have dared to enforce the moral law as the rule of the believer's conduct. This antinomian spirit has become the pest of many churches. It is the most mischievous and disgusting of all errors. If the heresies which abound in the spiritual world were to be represented by the noxious animals of the natural world, we could find some errors that would answer to the vulture, the tyger, and the serpent; but we could find nothing that would be an adequate emblem of antinomianism, except by a creation of our own, we had united in some monstrous reptile, the venom of the wasp, with the deformity of the spider, and the slime of the snail.

IX. Liberal support.

The Scripture is very explicit on this head, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Gal. vi. 6. "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges?—even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel, should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. ix. 7, 14. The necessity of this appears from the injunctions delivered to ministers to devote themselves exclusively to the duties of their office. 2 Tim. ii. 4. 1 Tim. iv. 13, 15. I by no means contend that it is unlawful for a minister to engage in secular concerns; for necessity is a law which supersedes the ordinary rules of human conduct; and what are they to do, whose stipend is too small to support a family, and who have no private source of supply? A minister is under additional obligations to provide for things honest, not only in the sight of the Lord, but of men; to owe no man any thing, to provide for his own house; and if he is not enabled to do this by the liberality of his flock, and has no private fortune, he must have recourse to the labour of his hands. It is to the deep, and wide, and endless reproach of some churches, that although possessed of ability to support their pastors in comfort, they dole out but a wretched pittance from their affluence, leaving them to make up the deficiency by a school, and then with insulting cruelty complain that their sermons are very meagre, and have a great sameness. Such congregations, if they were treated as they deserve, would be put upon abstinence for at least a twelve month, or until they were willing to support their pastor in comfort. They love him dearly with their lips, but hate him as cordially with their pockets. They keep him poor to keep him humble, forgetting that as humility is no less necessary for themselves than for him, this is an argument why the articles which minister to their pride, should be retrenched in order to support his comfort. This is certainly not drawing them with the cords of love and the bands of a man, but treating them like animals who are tamed into submission by hunger, and kept humble by being kept poor. It is curious to hear how some persons will entreat of God to bless their minister in his basket and his store, while alas! poor man, they have taken care that his basket should be empty, and his store nothingness itself. Is not this mocking both God and his minister with a solemn sound upon a thoughtless tongue?

Many rich Christians spend more in the needless wine they individually drink, than they contribute towards the support of their pastor; and others give more for the sugar that sweetens their tea, than they do for all the advantages of public worship. A reproach of this kind yet rests upon multitudes, which it is high time should be rolled away.

It is extremely difficult, where a matter of this kind must be left to voluntary contribution, and the dictates of individual liberality, to lay down particular rules; all that can be done, is, to state general principles, and leave these to operate in particular cases. Let all Christians therefore consider what is a just and generous reward for the labours of a man, who is devoting his life to assist them in obtaining an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away:—who, in assisting them to gain eternal life, exerts at the same time an indirect, but a beneficial influence upon all their temporal prosperity—who, by his ministrations, soothes their cares, lightens their sorrows, mortifies their sins, throws a radiance over their darkest scenes, and gilds their brightest ones with additional splendour?

Let it not be thought that what is given to a minister is a charitable donation; it is the payment of a just debt. It is what Christ claims for his faithful servants, and which cannot be withheld without robbery. I spurn for myself and for my brethren, the degrading apprehension that we are supported by charity. We are not clerical pensioners upon mere bounty. Our appeal is to justice ; and if our claims are denied on this ground, we refuse to plead before any other tribunal, and refer the matter to the great assize.

CHAPTER VI.

DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS TOWARDS EACH OTHER.

I. THE first, and that which indeed seems to include every other, is LOVE.

The stress which is laid on this in the Word of God, both as it respects the manner in which it is stated, and the frequency with which it is enjoined, sufficiently proves its vast importance in the Christian temper, and its powerful influence on the communion of believers. It is enforced by our Lord as the identifying law of his kingdom. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." John xv. 12. By this we learn that the subjects of Christ are to be known and distinguished amongst men, by their mutual affection. This injunction is denominated the new commandment of the Christian economy; not that love was no duty before the coming of Christ; but it is now placed more prominently amongst the duties of believers; is urged on fresh grounds, enforced by a more perfect example, and constrained by stronger motives. The dispensation of Jesus Christ is a system of most wonderful, most mysterious grace. It is the manifestation, commendation, and perfection of divine love. It originated in the love of the Father, and is accomplished by the love of the Son. Jesus Christ was an incarnation of love in our world. He was love living, breathing, speaking, acting, amongst men. His birth was the nativity of love, his sermons the words of love, his miracles the wonders of love, his tears the meltings of love, his crucifixion the agonies of love, his resurrection the triumph of love. Hence it was natural, that love should be the cardinal virtue in the character of his saints, and that it should be the law which regulates their conduct towards each other.

The Apostles echoed the language of their Master, and continually enjoined the churches which they had planted, to love one another, and to let brotherly love abound and increase. It is a grace so important that, like holiness, no measure of it is sufficient to satisfy the requirement of the Word of God. It is the basis, and cement, and beauty of the Christian union. The church where it is wanting, whatsoever may be the number or gifts of its members, is nothing better than a heap of stones, which, however polished, want the coherence and similitude of a palace.

In the best and purest ages of the church, this virtue shone so brightly in the character of its members, was so conspicuous in all their conduct, was expressed in actions so replete with noble, disinterested, and heroic affection, as to become a proverb with surrounding pagans, and call forth the well known exclamation, "See how these Christians love one another." A finer eulogium was never pronounced on the Christian church; a more valuable tribute was never deposited on the altar of christianity. Alas! that it should so soon have ceased to be just, and that the church as it grew older should have lost its loveliness by losing its love.

But it will be necessary to point out the manner in which brotherly love wherever it exists will operate.

1. In a peculiar complacency in our fellow members, as the objects of divine love.

Complacency is the very essence of love; and the ground of all proper complacency in the saints, is their relation and likeness to God. We should feel peculiar delight in each other as fellow heirs of the grace of God, partakers of like precious faith, and joint sharers of the common salvation. We must be dear to each other as the objects of the Father's mercy, the Son's dying grace, and the Spirit's sanctifying influence. The love of Christians is of a very sacred nature, and is quite peculiar. It is not the love of consanguinity, or friendship, or interest, or general esteem; but it is an affection cherished for Christ's sake. They may see many things in each other to admire, such as an amiable temper, public spirit, tender sympathy; but Christian love does not rest on these things, although they may increase it, but on the ground of a common relationship to Christ. On this account they are to take peculiar delight in each other, as being one in Christ. "These," should a believer exclaim, as he looks on the church, "are the objects of the Redeemer's living and dying love, whom he regards with complacency; and out of affection to him, I feel an inexpressible delight in them. I love to associate with them, to talk with them, to look upon them, because they are Christ's."

2. Love to our brethren will lead us to bear one another's burthens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Gal. vi. 2.

When we see them oppressed with a weight of anxious care, instead of carrying ourselves with cold indifference and unfeeling distance towards them, we should cherish a tender solicitude to know and relieve their anxieties. How touching would such a salutation as the following be from one Christian to another: "Brother, I have observed with considerable pain, that your countenance has been covered with gloom, as if you were sinking under some inward solici-itude. I would not be unpleasantly officious, nor wish to obtrude myself upon your attention, farther than is agreeable; but I offer you the expressions of Christian sympathy, and the assistance of Christian counsel. Can I in any way assist to mitigate your care, and restore your tranquillity?" At such sounds, the loaded heart would feel as if half its load were gone. It may be, the kind inquirer could yield no effectual relief, but there is balm in his sympathy. The indifference of some professing Christians to the burthens of their brethren is shocking; they would see them crushed to the very earth with cares and sorrows, and never make one kind inquiry into their situation, nor lend a helping hand to lift them from the dust. Love requires that we should take the deepest interest in each other's case, that we should patiently listen to the tale of woe which a brother brings us, that we should mingle our tears with his, that we should offer him our advice, that we should suggest to him the consolations of the gospel; in short, we should let him see that his troubles reach not only our ear but our heart. Sympathy is one of the finest, the most natural, the most easy expressions of love.

3. Love requires that we should visit our brethren in their affliction.

"I was sick and ye visited me, I was in prison and ye came unto me;—for as much as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me ;” such is the language of Jesus Christ to his people, by which he teaches us how important and incumbent a duty it is for church members to visit each other in their afflictions. Probably there is no duty more neglected than this. Christians often lie on beds of sickness for weeks and months successively, without seeing a fellow member cross the threshold of their chamber door. How often have I been shocked, when upon inquiring of the sufferer whether such and such an individual residing in their neighbourhood had been to visit them, it has been said in reply, “ Oh ! no sir, I have now been stretched on this bed for days and weeks. My pain and weakness have been so great, that I have scarcely been able to collect my thoughts for meditation and prayer. The sight of a dear Christian friend would indeed have relieved the dull monotony of this gloomy scene, and the voice of piety would have been as music to blunt my sense of pain, and lull my troubled heart to short repose ; but such a sight and such a sound have been denied me. No friend has been near me, and it has aggravated sorrows already heavy, to be thus neglected and forgotten by a church, which I joined with the hope of finding amongst them the comfort of sympathy. But alas ! alas ! I find them too much occupied with the things seen and temporal, to think of a suffering brother, to whom wearisome nights and months of vanity are appointed." How could I help exclaiming, "O, Christian love, bright image of the Saviour's heart! whither hast thou fled, that thou so rarely visitest the church on earth, to shed thine influence, and manifest thy beauties there?" There have been ages of christianity, so historians inform us, in which brotherly love prevailed amongst Christians to such a degree, that, fearless of the infection diffused by the most malignant and contagious disorders, they have ventured to the bed side of their brethren expiring in the last stages of the plague, to administer the consolations of a hope full of immortality. This was love; love stronger than death, and which many waters could not quench. It was no doubt imprudent, but it was heroic, and circulated far and wide the praises of that dear name which was the secret of the wonder.

How many are there, now bearing the Christian name, who scarcely ever yet paid one visit to the bed side of a suffering brother. Shame and disgrace upon such professors!! Let them not expect to hear the Saviour say, "I was sick, and ye visited me."

That this branch of Christian love may be performed with greater diligence, it would be a good plan for the pastor, at every church meeting, to mention the names of the afflicted members, and stir up the brethren to visit them. It would be particularly desirable for Christians to go to the scene of suffering on a Sabbath day, and read the Bible and sermons to the afflicted, at that time, as they are then peculiarly apt to feel their sorrows, in consequence of being cut off from the enjoyments of public worship.

4. "Pray one for another," James v. 16.

Not only with but for one another. A Christian should take the interests of his brethren into the closet. Private devotion is not to be selfish devotion. It would much increase our affection did we devote more of our private prayers to each other's welfare.

5. Pecuniary relief should be administered to those who need it.

"Distributing to the necessities of the saints," Rom. xii. 13, is mentioned amongst the incumbent duties of professing Christians. How just, how forcible is the interrogation of the Apostle, 1 John iii. 17, "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Nothing can be more absurd, than those pretensions to love, which are not supported by exertions to relieve the wants of the object beloved. It must be a singular affection which is destitute of mercy. So powerfully did this holy passion operate in the first ages of the church, that many rich

Christians sold their estates, and shared their affluence with the poor. What rendered this act the more remarkable is, that it was purely voluntary. It is not our duty any more than it was theirs, to go this length; still, however, it is evident both from general principles as well as from particular precepts, that we are under obligation to make some provision for the poor. This duty must be left in the statement of general terms, as it is impossible to define its precise limits. It does not appear to me to be at all incumbent to make regular periodical distributions to the poor, whether in circumstances of distress or not. Some churches have a registered list of pensioners, who come as regularly for their pay, as if they were hired servants. If they are old, infirm, or unprovided for, this is very well; but for those to receive relief, who are getting a comfortable subsistence by their labour, is an abuse of the charity of the church. The money collected at the Lord's supper should be reserved for times of sickness and peculiar necessity.

It should be recollected, also, that public contributions do not release the members from the exercise of private liberality. The shilling a month which is given at the sacrament, seems, in the opinion of many, to discharge them from all further obligation to provide for the comfort of their poorer brethren, and to be a sort of composition for the full exercise of religious charity. This is a great mistake; it ought rather to be considered as a mere earnest, or pledge of all that more effective and abundant liberality which they should exercise in secret.

6. Forbearance is a great part of love. *

“Forbearing one another in love.” Eph. iv. 4. In a Christian church, especially where it is of considerable magnitude, we must expect to find a very great diversity of character. There are all the gradations of intellect, and all the varieties of temper. In such cases great forbearance is absolutely essential to the preservation of harmony and peace. The strong must bear with the infirmities of the weak. Christians of great attainments in knowledge should not in their hearts despise, nor in their conduct ridicule the feeble conceptions of those who are babes in Christ; but most meekly correct their errors, and most kindly instruct their ignorance. This is love. In very many persons there will unhappily be found some things, which although they by no means affect the reality and sincerity of their religion, considerably diminish its lustre, and have a tendency, without the caution of love, to disturb our communion with them. Some have a forward and obtrusive manner; others are talkative; others indulge a complaining, whining, begging disposition; others are abrupt, almost to rudeness, in their address. These, and many more, are the spots of God's children—with which we are sometimes so much displeased, as to feel an alienation of heart from the subjects of them, although we have no doubt of their real piety. Now here is room for the exercise of love. These are the cases in which we are to employ that charity which covereth all things. Are we to love only amiable Christians? Perhaps, after all, in the substantial parts of religion, these rough characters far excel others, whom courtesy and amiableness have carried to the highest degree of polish. I do not say we are to love these individuals for their peculiarities, but in spite of them. Not on their own account, but for Christ's sake, to whom they belong. And what can be a greater proof of our affection for him, than to love an unlovely individual on his account?

If you had the picture of a valued friend, would you withdraw from it your affection, and throw it away, because there was a spot upon the canvas, which in some degree disfigured the painting? No; you would say, it is a likeness of my friend still, and I love it notwithstanding its imperfection. The believer is a picture of your best friend; and will you discard him, neglect him, because there is a speck upon the painting?

II. Church members should cultivate PEACE and HARMONY one with another.

“Keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Ephes. iv. 3. Be of one mind, live in peace. 2 Cor. iii. 11. Follow after the things which make for peace. Rom. xiv. 19.” It is quite needless to expatiate on the value and importance of peace. What society can exist without it? I shall therefore proceed to state what things are necessary for the attainment of this end.

1. Members should be subject one to another in humility. 1 Pet. v. 5, “Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you, be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility.” Now from hence we learn, that some kind of mutual subjection ought to be established in every Christian church. This of course does not mean, that some members are to make an entire surrender of their opinions and feelings to others, so far as never to oppose them, and always to be guided by them. It is not the subjection of an inferior to a superior, but of equals to one another; not that which is extorted by authority, but voluntarily conceded by affection; not yielded as matter of right, but given for the sake of peace: in short, it is the mutual subjection of love and humility. Young and inexperienced persons ought to be subject to the aged; for what can be more indecorous than to see a stripling standing up at a church meeting, and with confidence and flippancy, opposing his views to those of a disciple old enough to be his grandfather? Youth loses its loveliness when it loses its modesty. They should hearken with deference and most reverential attention to the opinion of the aged. Nor does the obligation rest here; it extends to those who are equal in age and rank: church members also should be subject to each other; they should not be determined at all events to have their own way, but should go as far as principle would let them, in giving up their own views and predilections to the rest. Every one should hearken with respectful attention to the opinions of others, and be willing to sacrifice his own. The contention ought not to be for rule, but for subjection. Instead of haughtily exclaiming, "I have as much right to have my way as any one else," we should say, "I have an opinion, and will mildly and respectfully state it; yet I will not force it upon the church, but give way to the superior wisdom of others, if I am opposed." There should be in every member a supposition that others may see as clearly, probably more so, than himself.

The democratic principle in our system of church government must not be stretched too far. The idea of equal rights, is soon abused and converted into the means of turbulence and faction. Liberty, fraternity, and equality, are words which both in church and state have often become the signals in the mouths of some, for the lawless invasion of the rights of others. It has been strangely forgotten, that no man in social life has a right to please only himself; his will is, or ought to be, the good of the whole. And that individual violates at once the social compact, whether in ecclesiastical or civil society, who pertinaciously and selfishly exclaims, "I will have my way." Such a declaration constitutes him a rebel against the community. Yet, alas! how much of this rebellion is to be found not only in the world, but in the church; and what havoc and desolation has it occasioned in the churches of Christ. Unfortunately for the peace of our societies, it is sometimes disguised, through the deceitfulness of the human heart, under the cloak of zeal for the general good. Let church members enter into these sentiments, and thus comply with the apostolic admonitions, "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves." Phil. ii. 3. "In honour preferring one another." Rom. xii. 10.

2. To the preservation of peace, a right treatment of offences is essentially necessary.

We should ever be cautious not to GIVE offence.

Some persons are rude, dogmatical, or indiscreet; they never consult the feelings of those around them, and are equally careless whom they please and whom they offend. They say and do just what their feelings prompt, without the least regard to the consequences of their words and actions. They act like an individual who, because it pleases him, discharges a loaded musket in a crowded street, where some are almost sure to be wounded. This is not the charity which is kind, courteous, and civil. A Christian should be ever afraid of giving offence; he should be anxious not to injure the wing of an insect—much more the mind of a brother. The peace of his brethren should even be more sacred than his own. It should be his fixed determination never, if possible, to occasion a moment's pain. For this purpose he should be discreet, and mild, and courteous in all his language, weighing the import of words before he utters them, and calculating the consequence of actions before he performs them. He should remember that he is moving in a crowd, and be careful not to trample on, or jostle his neighbours.

We should all be backward to RECEIVE offence.

Quarrels often begin for want of the caution I have just stated, and are then continued for want of the backwardness I am now enforcing. An observance of these two principles would keep the world in peace. There are some people whose passions are like tow, kindled into a blaze in a moment by the least spark which has been designedly or accidentally thrown upon it. A word, a look, is in some cases quite enough to be considered a very serious injury. It is no uncommon thing for such persons to excuse themselves on the ground that their feelings are so delicately sensible that they are offended by the least touch. This is a humiliating confession, for it is acknowledging that instead of being like the cedar of Lebanon, or the oak of the forest which laughs at the tempest and is unmoved by the boar of the wood, they resemble the sensitive plant, a little squeamish shrub, which trembles before the breeze, and shrivels and contracts beneath the pressure of an insect. Delicate feelings !! In plain English, this means that they are petulant and irascible. I would have a text of Scripture written upon a label, and tied upon the forehead of such persons, and it should be this—"Beware of dogs."

We should never suffer ourselves to be offended, until, at least, we are sure that offence was intended; and this is really not so often as we are apt to conclude. Had we but patience to wait, or humility to inquire, we should find that many things were done by mistake, which we are prone to attribute to design. How often do we violate that charity which thinketh no evil, and which imperatively demands of us to attribute a good motive to another's conduct, except a bad one is proved. Let us then deliberately determine, that, by God's grace, we will not be easily offended. If such a resolution were generally made and kept, offences would cease. Let us first ascertain whether offence was intended, before we suffer the least emotion of anger to be indulged ; and even then, when we have proved that the offence was not committed by accident, let us next ask ourselves whether it is worth while to notice it. What wise man will think it worth while, when an insect has stung him, to pursue and punish the aggressor ?

When we have received an injury which is too serious to be passed over unnoticed, and requires explanation in order to our future pleasant intercourse with the individual who inflicts it, we should neither brood over it in silence, nor communicate it to a third person, but go directly to the offender himself, and state to him in private our views of his conduct. This is most clearly enjoined by our divine Lord—"Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Matt. xviii. 15. Many persons lock up the injury in their own bosom ; and instead of going to their offending brother, dwell upon his conduct in silence, until their imagination has added to it every possible aggravation, and their minds have come to the conclusion to separate themselves forever from his society. From that hour, they neither speak to him, nor think well of him ; but consider and treat him as an alien from their hearts. This is not religion. Our duty is to go, and to go as speedily as possible, to the offender. The longer we delay, the more serious will the offence appear in our eyes, and the more difficult will it be to persuade ourselves to obtain the interview.

Others, when they have received an offence, set off to some friend, perhaps to more than one, to lodge their complaint, and tell how they have been treated. The report of the injury spreads farther and wider, exaggerated and swelled by those circumstances, which every gossip through whose hands it passes, chooses to add to the original account, till in process of time it comes round to the offender himself, in its magnified and distorted form, who now finds that he in his turn is aggrieved and calumniated ; and thus, a difficult and complicated case of offence, grows out of what was at first most simple in its nature, and most capable of being adjusted. We ought to go at once to the party offending us, before a syllable has past our lips on the subject to a third person : and we should also close our ears against the complaints of any individual, who would inform us of the fault of a brother, before he has told the offender himself.

Sometimes when persons have received a supposed offence, they will endeavour to gain information from others in a circuitous and clandestine manner, in order, as they think, to conduct the affair with prudence. This is crooked policy, and rarely succeeds. It is next to impossible to creep with a step so soft, and to speak with a voice so muffled, as to escape detection; and if the individual surprise us in the act of ferreting into holes and corners for evidence, it will be sure to excite his indignation and disgust. No, go to him at once, AND ALONE. This is the command of Scripture, and it is approved by reason, Matt. xviii. 15—17. This single admonition is worth all the volumes that philosophy ever wrote, and ought to be inscribed in letters of gold. It cannot be too often repeated, nor can too much stress be laid upon it. Third persons, whose ears are ever open to catch reports, should be avoided as the plague; they are the mischief-makers and quarrel-mongers, and are the pests of our churches.

Great caution, however, should be observed as to the spirit in which we go to the offending brother. All the meekness and gentleness of Christ should be in our temper and manner. We should dip our very tongue in the fountain of love. Every feeling, every look, every tone of anger, should be suppressed. We should not at once accuse our brother of the injury, for the report may be false ; but modestly ask him if it be correct. All attempts to extort confession by threatenings should be avoided ; and instead of these, nothing should be employed but the appeals of wisdom, the gentle persuasions of love.*

* There is a very interesting description of the manner in which private offences should be treated, in that inimitable book, "Social Religion Exemplified ;" a book which every professing Christian ought to read, and which having begun to read, he will never lay aside, till he has finished it. Part of a dialogue, I here transcribe, as shewing the manner and spirit in which this very difficult matter ought to be managed :—

"NEOPHYTUS. If Epenetus please, and with the good leave of the company, I would further request a brief account of private offences, that probably occurred among these professing brethren.

"EPENETUS. I shall then gratify my young friend, which I am persuaded will not be ungrateful to the company. Upon a time, in some discourse which Egwan (of whom you have heard something before) and one Hyderus had, wherein they differed in opinion, the latter told the former that he was an insignificant fellow, whose thoughts were not to be regarded. Egwan said in answer, that he took it very ill of him. The other replied, You may take it as you please. So their conversation ended in a cloud. Egwan had but little rest that night. Is it so, then, he says to himself ; and yet did Christ redeem me ? Did the Spirit of the Lord visit my heart ? Did the church of Christ receive me ? And must I (though weak and feeble) be called

If we succeed in this private interview to gain our brother so far as to produce a little relenting, we ought to cherish by the kindest expressions, these beginnings of repentance, and to avoid all insignificant? Tossed through the night in much uneasiness, he thought to go in the morning to one of the elders to complain. He got up, and as usual, in the first place committed himself to God: but while he was at prayer, mourning over his present uneasiness, that word came into his mind, If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. He quickly saw, that it was not his immediate business to divulge it to any body,—no, not to an elder; but to go directly to the brother who gave him the offence. Accordingly, he desired God to give him meekness of wisdom from above, and to bless his design. So he went to Hyderus, and spoke to him as follows:

Egwon. Brother, I have had a very uneasy night; you spoke, I think, very unadvisably with your lips, to say no worse of it; you have grieved me much, and surely you have sinned against God. I have judged it my duty to come and have some talk with you about it; and have mentioned it to none but the Lord. You know you called me, in disdain, An insignificant fellow. Pray, what do you think of the expression, and of the spirit in which it was spoken?

Hyderus. Truly, I think it was not worth your while to come to me about it. I charge you not with pride; yet pray does it not look very much that way, that you should make it your business to come hither to prove yourself valuable and significant?

demands of unnecessary concession, all haughty airs of conscious superiority, all insulting methods of dispensing pardon. "Brother," we should say, "my aim was not to degrade you, but to Egwan. I came with no other design than to tell you my grievance. For if I am such a person as, with disdain, you described me, then am I not regarded by the Redeemer; have no portion in him, nor doth his Spirit dwell in me; nor hath he ever taken notice of me; otherwise, sure, I should be entitled to a place in the esteem of his children. Why did the church receive me? You have censured the whole church and its elders, as well as myself.

Hyderus. I do not pretend to justify what I said; but think you greatly aggravate it; whereas, you might as well have been easy without taking any notice of it.

Egwan. And suffer the sin to lie upon you? Brother, nothing is desired but repentance for sinning against God. I hope I am willing to think meanly of myself, but am not so willing that any thing appertaining to the Redeemer's kingdom should be treated with derision or disdain.

Hyderus. Dear brother, I disdain you not; you discover yourself to be a Christian of good improvement. I am sorry to have so sinned against God and you, and desire that brotherly love and tender respect may continue.

Egwan. Amen; I am satisfied, dear brother.

CHRISTOPHILUS. What a speedy, happy end was put to this offence! Oh, what endless strife of tongues, convince you ; and since you see and acknowledge your fault, I am satisfied, and shall forgive and forget it from this moment."

If the offender should refuse to acknowledge his fault, and it should be necessary for us to take a witness or two, which is our next step in settling a disagreement, we must be very careful to select men of great discretion and calmness ; men who will not be likely to inflame, instead of healing the wound ; men who will act as mediators, not as partizans.

It is absolutely necessary in order to offences being removed, that the offender, upon his being convicted of an injury, should make all suitable concession ; and it will generally be found, that in long continued and complicated evil surmisings, animosities, and popular clamour, spring and prevail in some places, for want of observing such a method as this !

NEOPHYTUS. But what if Egwan had gone to the elder first, as he thought once to do ?

EPENETUS. Why then he would have been re-proved for taking such a wrong step ; would have been better informed, and sent about his business.

NEOPHYTUS. But what if Hyderus had justified himself and persisted in his sin ?

EPENETUS. Then Egwan must have taken another opportunity, and desired a brother or two to go along with him ; that they might use their joint endeavours to bring the offender to repentance.

strifes, this obligation becomes mutual. Whoever is the ORIGINAL aggressor, a feud seldom continues long, ere both parties are to blame. Even the aggrieved individual has something to concede; and the way to induce the other to acknowledge his greater offence, is for him to confess his lesser one. It is the mark of a noble and ingenuous mind to confess an error, and solicit its forgiveness. "Confess your faults one to another," is an inspired injunction. The man who is too proud to acknowledge his fault, when his conduct demands it, has violated his duty, and is a fit subject for censure. There are some persons, so far forgetful of their obligations to Christ and to their brethren, as not only to refuse to make concession, but even to give explanation. Their proud spirits disdain even to afford the least satisfaction in the way of throwing light upon a supposed offence. This is most criminal, and is such a defiance of the authority of the Lord Jesus, as ought to bring the individual before the bar of the church.

We should be very cautious not to exact unreasonable concession. A revengeful spirit is often as effectually gratified by imposing hard and humiliating terms of reconciliation, as it possibly could be by making the severest retaliation. No offender is so severely punished, as he who is obliged to degrade himself in order to obtain a pardon. And as all revenge is unlawful, we should be extremely careful not to gratify it at the very time and by the manner in which we are dispensing pardon. To convince a brother, not to degrade him, is the object we are to seek; and especially should we endeavour to show him, that his offence is more against Christ than against ourselves.

When suitable acknowledgments are made, the act of forgiveness is no longer optional with us. From that moment every spark of anger, every feeling of a revengeful nature, is to be quenched. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the devil." Ephes. iv. 26, 27. If we suffer sleep to visit our eyes before we have forgiven an offending, but penitent brother, we are committing a greater offence against Christ, than our brother has committed against us. The man that takes a revengeful temper to his pillow, is inviting Satan to be his bedfellow. Such a man would probably tremble at the thought of taking a harlot to his bed; but is it no crime to sleep in the embrace of a fiend? The word revenge should be blotted from the Christian's vocabulary by the tears which he sheds for his own offences. How can an implacable Christian repeat that petition of our Lord's prayer, "Forgive me my trespasses as I forgive them that trespass against me?" Does he forget that if he uses such language while he is living in a state of resentment against a brother, he is praying for perdition? for how does he forgive them that trespass against him? By revenge. How strong is the language of St. Paul, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be kind one to another, and tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Ephes. iv. 30—32. What motives to a forgiving spirit!! Can that man have ever tasted the sweets of pardoning mercy, who refuses to forgive an erring brother? Go, Christian professor, go first to the law, and learn thy twice ten thousand sins; go in imagination to the brink of the bottomless pit, and as thou hearkenest to the howlings of the damned, remember that those howlings might have been thine; then go to the cross, and while thou lookest on the bleeding victim, which is nailed to it, hearken to the accents of mercy which breathe like soft music in thine ear, "Go in peace, thy sins are all forgiven thee." What, will you, can you return from such scenes, with purposes of revenge? No; impossible. An implacable Christian is a contradiction in terms. "Bigots there may be, and have been of all denominations; but an implacable, irreconcilable, unforgiving Christian, is of the same figure of speech, as a godly adulterer, a religious drunkard, a devout murderer."*

The last step in reclaiming an offender, is to bring him before the assembled church. "If he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established; and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." Every effort that ingenuity can invent, affection prompt, or patience can conduct, ought to be made, before it be brought to be investigated by the brethren at large. If every trivial disagreement be laid before the church, it will soon become a court of common pleas, and have all its time consumed in adjusting matters of which it ought never to have heard. Before a public inquiry takes place, the pastor should be made acquainted with the matter; who, if he possess the confidence and affection of his people, will have sufficient influence, at least in all ordinary cases, to terminate the difference in an amicable manner. It is best to settle it even without his interference, if possible; but it is better to consult him in every case, before the affair is submitted to the last tribunal.

* Dr. Grosvenor's most pathetic Sermon on the "Temper of Jesus."

An offence ought never to be considered as removed, until love is restored. We should never rest until such an explanation has been given and received, as will enable us to return to harmony and confidence. A mere cessation of actual hostilities may do for the intercourse of the world, but not for the fellowship of the saints. There is no actual strife between the tenants of the sepulchre; but the cold and gloomy stillness of a church-yard is an inappropriate emblem of the peace of a Christian church. In such a community we expect, that not only will the discords and sounds of enmity be hushed, but the sweet harmonies of love be heard; not only that the conflict of rage will terminate, but be succeeded by the activity of genuine affection.

When once an offence has been removed, it should never be adverted to in future. Its very remembrance should if possible be washed from the memory by the waters of Lethe. Other causes of disagreement may exist, and fresh feuds arise; but the old one is dead and buried, and its angry ghost should never be evoked to add fury to the passion of its successor. Nor should we, when in our turn we are convicted of an error, shelter ourselves from reproof, by reminding our reprover, that he was once guilty of a similar offence. This is mean, dishonourable, unchristian, and mischievous.

Every Christian should bear reproof with meekness. Few know how to give reproof with propriety, still fewer how to bear it. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be as excellent oil, which shall not break my head." How small is the number who can adopt this language in sincerity. What wounded pride, what mortification and resentment are felt by many when their faults are told to them. When we have so far sinned as to deserve rebuke, we ought to have humility enough to bear it with meekness; and should it be delivered in greater weight, or with less affection, than we think is proper, a penitential remembrance of our offence should prevent all feelings of irritation or resentment.

2. If the peace of the church be preserved, the members must watch against, and repress, a TATTLING DISPOSITION.

There are few circumstances which tend more to disturb the harmony and repose of our societies, than a proneness in some of their members to a gossiping, tattling disposition. There are persons so deeply infected with the Athenian passion to hear or tell some new thing, that their ears or lips are always open. With insatiable appetite they devour all the news they can by any means collect, and are never easy until it is all disgorged again, to the unspeakable annoyance and disgust of others around them. It is one of the mysteries of God's natural government, that such should gain a sort of adventitious consequence by the mischief they occasion, and be thus sheltered from scorn by being regarded with dread. The tattler is of this description : I mean the individual who loves to talk of other men's matters, and especially of their faults : for it will be found, that by a singular perversity of disposition, those who love to talk about the circumstances of others, rarely ever select their excellencies as matter of discourse, but almost always fix upon their failings ; and thus, to borrow a simile of Solomon's, they resemble the fly which neglects the healthful part of the frame to pitch and luxuriate on the sore.

In the case of tattling there are generally three parties to blame ; there is first the gossip, then the person who is weak enough to listen to, and report the tales ; and lastly, the individual who is the subject of the report, who suffers his mind to be irritated, instead of going, in the spirit of meekness, to require an explanation from the original reporter.

Now let it be a rule with every church member, to avoid speaking of the circumstances, and especially of the faults of others. Let this rule have the sanctity of the laws of Heaven, and the immutability of those of the Medes and Persians. Let every individual resolve with himself thus : "I will be slow to speak of others. I will neither originate a report by saying what I think, nor help to circulate a report by repeating what I hear." This is a most wise regulation, which would at once preserve our own peace and the peace of society. We should beware of saying any thing, which by the perverted ingenuity of a slanderous disposition, may become the basis of a tale to the disadvantage of another. It is not enough, as I have hinted, that we do not originate a report, but we ought not to circulate it. When it reaches us, there it should stop and go no farther. We should give it to prudence, to be buried in silence. We must never appear pleased with the tales of gossips and news-mongers, much less with the scandals of the back-biter ; our smile is their reward. If there were no listeners, there would be no reporters. In company let us always discourage and repress such conversation. Talkers know where to find a market for their stuff ; and like poachers and smugglers, who never carry their contraband articles to the house of an exciseman, they never offer their reports to an individual who they know would reprove them in the name of Jesus.

Let us beware of in ourselves, and discourage in others, the hollow deceitful practice of indulging a tattling disposition, by professedly lamenting over the faults of our brethren.

Many who would be afraid or ashamed to mention the faults of a brother in the way of direct affirmation or report, easily find, or attempt to find, a disguise for their backbiting disposition in affected lamentations. "What a pity it is," they exclaim, "that brother B. should have behaved so ill. Poor man, I am sorry that he should have committed himself. The petulance of his temper is exceedingly to be regretted. He does not much honour religion." "And then," replies a second, "how sorry I am to hear this report of sister C. ; how the world will talk, and the cause of Christ suffer by such unwarrantable things in the conduct of a professor. It will not be a secret long, or I would not mention it." "Oh," says a third, "I have heard whispers of the same kind in times past. I have long suspected it, and mentioned my fears some months ago to a friend or two. I thought she was not the person she appeared to be. I am very sorry for her, and for the cause of Christ. I have long had my suspicions, and now they are all confirmed. I shall tell the friends to whom I expressed my fears what I have now heard." In this way is a tattling disposition indulged in the circles of even good people, under the guise of lamentation for the sins of others. "Odious and disgusting cant," would a noble and honourable Christian exclaim, with hallowed indignation, "which of you, if you really lamented the fact, would report it? which of you has gone to the erring individual, inquired into the truth of the matter, and, finding it true, has mildly expostulated? Let your lamentations be poured out before God and the offender, but to none else."

Others, again, indulge this disposition by running about to inquire into the truth of a report which they say has reached them, respecting a brother. "Have you heard any thing of brother H. lately?" they ask with a significant look. "No;" replies the person. "Then I suppose it is not true." "Why, what have you heard? Nothing I hope affecting his moral character." "Not very materially; but I hope it is false." The tattler cannot go, however, without letting out the secret, and then sets off to inquire of another and another. Mischief making creature! Why had he not gone, as was his obvious duty, to the individual who was the subject of the report, and inquired of him the truth of it? Aye, but then the story would have been contradicted at once, and the pleasure of telling it would have been ended.

There are cases in which a modest disclosure of the failings of others is necessary. Such, for example, as when a church is likely to be deceived in the character of an individual, whom it is about to admit to communion. In such instances, the person who is aware of the imposition that is likely to be practised, should go directly to the pastor, and make him acquainted with the fact; instead of which, some persons whisper their suspicions to any and to many, except the pastor. It is perfectly lawful also to prevent any brother from being betrayed into a ruinous confidence in pecuniary matters, by informing him of the character of the individual by whom he is about to be deceived. Silence, in such cases, would be an obvious injury.

BE SLOW TO SPEAK, then, is a maxim which every Christian should always keep before his eyes. Silent people can do no harm; but talkers are always dangerous.

III. Besides these things, there are duties which members owe to the church in its collective capacity.

1. They are bound to take a deep interest in its concerns, and to seek its prosperity by all lawful means.

Every one should feel that he has a personal share in the welfare of the society. He should consider that having selected that particular community with which he is associated, as his religious home, he is under a solemn obligation to promote by every proper effort, its real interest. He is to be indifferent to nothing which at any time affects its prosperity. Some members, from the moment they have joined a Christian church take no concern in any of its affairs. They scarcely ever attend a church meeting; they know neither who are excluded, nor who are received. If members are added, they express no delight; if none are admitted, they feel no grief. They fill up their places at the table, and in the house of God; and beyond this, seem to have nothing else to do with the church. This is a most criminal apathy; a Christian ought to be as tremblingly alive to the welfare of the religious society to which he is united, as he is to the success of his worldly affairs.

2. They are bound to attend all the meetings of the church, at least so far as their circumstances will allow. They had better be absent from sermons and prayer-meetings, than from these. How can they know the state of the society, if they are not present when its affairs are exhibited and arranged? or how can they exercise that proper confidence in the piety of the brethren, which is essential to fellowship, if they are absent at the time of their admission?

3. They should most conscientiously devote their gifts, graces, and abilities to the service of the church, in an orderly and modest way; neither obtruding their assistance when it is not required, nor withholding it when it is solicited. Those who have gifts of prayer, should not be backward to exercise them for the edification of their brethren. Those who have penetration and sound judgment, should render their counsel and advice upon every occasion. Persons of large and respectable worldly connexions may often use their influence with great benefit to the temporal affairs of the society.

And there is one line of charitable exertion, which would be peculiarly beneficial, and which has been too much neglected in all our societies; I mean the practice of respectable members reading the Scriptures, religious tracts, and sermons, in the habitations of the poor. I am aware that this is an age when many run to and fro, and when lay preaching is carried to a very improper and mischievous extent. Some who have no other qualification for preaching than boldness and ignorance, are every Sabbath employed, of whom it might be said, that it is a pity they have not the gift of silence. Unfortunately, those who are most qualified, are frequently least disposed; while the least qualified, are the most zealous. But how many wise, judicious, holy men, are there in our churches, who would be most honourably and most usefully employed, in reading the words of life, and short evangelical sermons, in the cottages of the poor. Let a convenient house be selected, and the neighbours invited to attend; and who can tell what vast benefit would accrue from such a scheme? By the blessing of God upon these efforts, reformation would be wrought in the lower classes; religion would gain an entrance where it could be introduced by no other means; and our churches be replenished with holy, consistent members. Persons of respectable circumstances in life, especially, should thus employ themselves, as their situation gives them greater influence. Females may be thus engaged, without transgressing either against the injunction of the apostle, or the modesty which is so becoming their sex. I am astonished that means of usefulness so simple, so easy, and so efficient, are not more generally employed.

4. It is due to the authority of the church, that every member should cordially submit to its discipline. Without this, order would be destroyed, and the reign of anarchy introduced. This, indeed, as we have already considered, is essentially implied in the very act of joining the church; and no one ought to think of such an act of union, who is not determined to submit to its rules and its decisions.

CHAPTER VII.

THE DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS TO THE MEMBERS OF OTHER CHRISTIAN SOCIETIES.

FIRST. In those cases where the churches are of a different denomination.

1. We should not deride their religious opinions and practices.

They act conscientiously; and whatever is done at the dictate of conscience, is too sacred to be made the matter of ridicule. The way to bring the scorn of ungodly men upon all religion, is for religious people, differing upon minor points, to jest with each other's practices.

2. Let us avoid religious bigotry and prejudice.

By bigotry, I mean such an overweening attachment to our opinions and denomination, as alienates our affections from Christians of other name, and leads us to conclude there is little excellence or piety, except in our own communion. Some Christians are so shortsighted by prejudice, that they cannot discern the most splendid exhibitions of moral excellence, if they are at the least removed from their own denomination. The consideration, that a man is not of their party, is sufficient in their evil eye, to dim the lustre of an example which angels admire, and to eclipse that living luminary, which, to the eye of Heaven, shines with most radiant glory. Their moral vision has so long and so intently poured over the minute distinctions of party, as to have acquired a contraction of power, which prevents them from comprehending and admiring as they would otherwise do, the grander features of religion in general.

I know not a proof of true piety more decisive, and more pleasing, than that quick perception, and fervent admiration of the beauties of holiness, which lead a man to recognise and love them, wherever they are seen, whether in his own denomination or in others. "The evil to be deplored in the present state of the church, is the unnatural distance at which Christians stand from each other, the spirit of sects, the disposition to found their union on the wood, hay, and stubble of human inventions or disputable tenets, instead of the eternal Rock, the faith once delivered to the saints. Surely, surely, we shall find a sufficient bond of union, a sufficient scope for all our sympathies in the doctrine of the cross."*

* Robert Hall.

SECONDLY. I shall now speak of the conduct of Christians to the members of other churches of their own denomination.

It does not unfrequently happen, that where two or more churches of the same denomination exist in a town, a most unhappy, unscriptural, disgraceful temper, is manifested towards each other. All the feelings of envy, jealousy, and ill will, are cherished and displayed with as much, or more bitterness, than two rival tradesmen would exhibit in the most determined opposition of interests. This is peculiarly the case, where two churches have been formed, by a schism, out of one. Oftentimes the feud has been perpetuated through one generation, and has been bequeathed to the generation following. Can it be that these are churches of saints? Can it be that these are all one in Christ? Can it be that these are societies, whose rule is the word of Christ, whose conduct is the image of Christ, whose end is the glory of Christ!!

Shame, public, deep, indelible shame on such societies! Is it thus that churches quarrel, to find sport for their enemies? By all the regard which is due to the authority of the Lord Jesus, by all the constraining influence of his love, let such societies be impelled to terminate their hateful strifes, which are not more dishonourable to the cause of religion in general, than they are injurious to the interests of piety within their own immediate sphere of action. With what bitter taunts, with what sarcastic triumph, do profane and infidel spectators point to such scenes, and ironically exclaim, "See how these Christians love one another!"

Let us guard against this evil where it does not exist, and endeavour to suppress it where it does. Let us not look with envy and jealousy on the growing prosperity of other societies. Let us not consider their success as in any degree encroaching upon ours. If we succeed more in our own church, let us be thankful, but not boastful; if others take precedence, let us be stirred up to affectionate, holy emulation, but not to envy and jealousy.

A worthy minister, who used to preach a week day lecture in the city of London, heard a friend expressing his regret that it was so ill attended. "Oh, that," replied the minister, "is of little consequence, as the gospel is preached by several others in the same neighbourhood; and in such a situation, for any one to be very desirous that people should come and hear the gospel from him, instead of others, seems as unreasonable, as it would be for one of the shopmen in a large shop, to wish all the customers to come to his particular part of the counter. If the customers come at all, and the goods go off, in so far as he feels an interest in the prosperity of the shop, he will rejoice." Lovely and rare example of true humility, pure zeal, and genuine love to Christ! Look at this, ye ministers and churches, who quarrel with your neighbours, and scarcely speak well of them, because they prosper no less than you! Shall we feel mortified when immortal souls are saved, because we were not the instruments of their conversion? Shall we say, if we cannot gather them into our church, let them not be gathered? If two rival physicians, who had each as much as he could do, when the plague was raging in a town, looked with envy and grudging on each other's success, what should we say of their spirit? But such a temper in these circumstances is far less criminal than the envious disposition of some ministers and their flocks.

There should be a spirit of mutual affection between the members of different churches. They should love as brethren; and that this might not be disturbed, they should avoid, when they meet in their respective social circles, all invidious and uncharitable reference to the others. Nothing is more common than for the Christians of one society to make the circumstances and faults of those of another, the leading topics of conversation. Thus the coals of strife are kindled in these Christian parties, and every one present lends his breath to fan the flame. It is melancholy indeed, when our houses are thus converted into temples for the God of this world, the divider of the brethren; and our family altar is lent for an offering of scandal at his shrine. Ministers, and leading persons in the company, should always set their faces against this mischievous gossip. All comparisons between the talents of the ministers, and the respectability of their churches, should be carefully abstained from. This is sure to do harm. It is right for every church member to be attached to his own pastor, and he may very innocently think that his minister is the best preacher in the town; but it is insulting and mischievous to express his opinion to those who prefer another. It is not unusual for the pulpit to be converted into a source of the most disgusting adulation, and for a ministerial sycophant to flatter the pride of his flock, by telling them how superior they are to all others in affluence, liberality, and influence. Such fawning, to say nothing of its littleness, is exceedingly injurious. What is intended as a compliment to one church, is felt as an insult by all others in its vicinity. All boasting should be most conscientiously refrained from, both on the part of ministers and people. If they are in a state of spiritual prosperity, let them be thankful, but not vain-glorious. "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up." The apostle delivered a very keen rebuke on those who are the trumpeters of their own fame, when he said, "I speak not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly in the confidence of boasting. Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also, for ye suffer fools gladly."

Church members should never resent by coldness, and distance of behaviour, the conduct of those who leave THEIR society, to join another in the same town. They have a right to exercise their own judgment as well as we, and in their view at least, have as good reason for preferring the pastor to whom they go, as we have for continuing with the one they leave. They may separate too hastily, and not on sufficient grounds; but that is their concern, not ours. I have known cases in which both the minister and his flock have refused even the civilities of ordinary intercourse to those who have left their church to associate with another. This is a most pitiful and unchristian disposition.

There are duties to be performed by the church in its collective capacity towards other societies of the same denomination.

1. We should own them as churches of Christ, cherish the most friendly and fraternal feelings towards them, and hold Christian communion with them, in all the duties of our common faith and practice.

Such appears to have been the feelings of the primitive churches. "The churches of Christ salute you." Rom. xvi. 16. "The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you." 1 Pet. v. 13. "Ye are taught of God to love one another, and ye do it toward all the the brethren in Macedonia." 1 Thes. iv. 9, 10.

2. We should receive their members when recommended to us, and freely grant honourable recommendations of our members to them.

"I commend unto you Phebe our sister, a servant of the church at Cenchrea; receive her in the Lord as becometh saints, and assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you." Rom. xvi. 1. "They are the messengers of the churches; shew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love." 2 Cor. viii. 23, 24.

3. We should co-operate with neighbouring churches for promoting the spread of the gospel, either by local or general institutions.

Many objects, of vast importance to the spread of the gospel in the world, can be accomplished by the union of churches, which cannot be effected without it. Union is power. Places of worship may be opened, the faithful ministry of the word introduced, and churches planted in dark benighted villages; while all the grand and noble institutions organized to save a perishing world, may by this means receive additional support. United fires brighten each other's blaze, and increase each other's intensity; and thus the association of churches, enkindles each other's zeal, and provokes one another to love and to good works. Nor is zeal the only Christian virtue promoted by such unions ; brotherly love is cherished and excited. The presence of messengers from other churches at the annual meetings of our societies, produces a friendly feeling and brotherly interest, not unlike that which a family experiences, when gathered together at their Christmas party. One great end of assembling the males of the Jewish nation three times a year before the ark, was to keep up a brotherly feeling between the different and distant parts of the nation. Nothing is so likely to cherish the fire of love, as the fuel supplied by works of zeal.

4. We should be willing to give and receive ADVICE in cases of difficulty and importance.

Of course, the independence of the churches, and the right of private judgment, should be vigilantly watched, and sacredly preserved. We have no dominion over each other's conduct, any more than over each other's faith. The idea of control, is as repugnant to revelation, as it is to reason. And we are to resist unto blood, striving against the usurpation of foreign compulsory interference. But advice does not imply control. The dread which has been felt of the simple act of one church's asking the advice of a neighbouring minister, or an association of ministers, in cases of extreme difficulty, discovers a fear of domination, which is perfectly childish.

How consonant with all the dictates of reason, and all the proceedings of civil life, is it, for two parties in a state of litigation, to ask the opinion of a third; or for one individual in difficulty, to solicit the advice of another. When a minister and his flock are in some critical situation, let them jointly agree to lay their affairs before some two or three neighbouring ministers and laymen of sound judgment, for counsel and direction; and how often, by this simple, rational, scriptural process, would a society be brought back from the brink of ruin to peace and safety. But what if they should not take the advice thus given? They must then be left to themselves, and would be but where they were before. The disposition which scorns to ask, and refuses to take advice, savours far more of the pride of independence, than the love of peace; and of the temper which courts interminable anarchy rather than be indebted for the restoration of order, to the opinions and persuasions of another. Men which stand out of the mist of passion, can see more clearly than those enveloped in the fog.

5. We should take a deep interest in the welfare of other churches, and in a suitable and proper manner express our sympathy, and afford to them our assistance.

We should at our church meetings remember in prayer, the cases of such as are in circumstances of affliction; and in the event of the death of a pastor, how consoling would it be to a bereaved church, to receive letters of condolence from neighbouring societies. There is one way, in which the most effectual help may be rendered by one church to another: I mean, pecuniary assistance granted from such as are wealthy to those who are poor. We are informed, Acts xi. 29, 30, that the disciples at Antioch sent relief, according to their abilities, to the poor saints in Judea. "Concerning the collection for the saints, as I had given orders to the churches at Galatia: Even so do ye." 1 Cor. xvi. 1. I am aware that this is sometimes done out of a fund, raised by the joint contributions of the churches in a county or district association; but how great would be the effect produced, if a church, in its individual capacity, were from year to year to send a donation to some poor community in its neighbourhood. What a lovely display of Christian feeling would this be! How would it endear the societies to each other! It would assist those to gain an efficient and settled minister, who, probably, but for such help, would only enjoy the precarious labours of occasional and incompetent preachers. The comfort of many faithful and laborious ministers would be thus promoted, and the kingdom of Jesus Christ enlarged.

Ye rich churches in our large cities, and in the country, who, without effort, can raise for your own pastors ample salaries, I appeal to your liberality, on behalf of those many churches scattered up and down the land, which are withering for the want of a little of that wealth, which you could spare, without lessening the comfort, either of your minister, or your families. I would not rob the funds of Missionary, or Bible Societies, to replenish the little store of gospel ministers at home; but I will say, that no foreign objects should be allowed to interfere with the claims of those deserving and holy men, who are labouring for souls amidst all the ills of poverty, and all the cares and woes which such ills must necessarily entail.

Where is the favoured individual, into whose lap the bounty of heaven has poured the abundance of riches, and into whose heart divine grace has introduced the mercy that is full of good fruits? here let him find an object worthy of his wealth and of his zeal. Let him become the nursing father of our poor churches. If he spend two thousand a year in this way, he may give forty dollars a year to fifty ministers. What a means of usefulness! How many infant churches would smile upon him from their cradle; and as they turned upon him, their eyes glistening with gratitude, would exclaim, "My Father, my Father!" In how many church-books would his name be enrolled, amidst the benedictions and prayers of the saints!

CHAPTER VIII.

THE DUTIES OF CHURCH MEMBERS IN THEIR PECULIAR CHARACTER AND STATION.

I. THE pastor's wife.

A station so honourable, so important, so responsible, must necessarily be attended with duties numerous, difficult, and of great consequence. Her situation stands next in influence, and therefore in responsibility, to that of her husband; the minister excepted, she has the greatest opportunity of any member of the church, to do good or harm. As a wife, she should be a bright pattern of all that tender affection, that unsuspecting confidence, that cheerful obedience, that undivided devotedness to her husband's comfort, which such a relationship implies; a lovely, spotless exhibition of conjugal virtue. No man is in greater need of all the force of conjugal sympathy and love, than a faithful minister.

As the female head of a family, she should direct her household affairs with judgment, and be a model of order, neatness, and domestic discipline. A minister derives some degree of respectability from the state of his family. Home scenes, according as they are lovely or repulsive, form a beauteous halo round, or dark specks upon, the orb of his public character. It is required of him that he should rule well his own household; but in this he is dependent upon his wife. What a disgrace is it that his house should be such a scene of disorder, as to disgust, by its confusion, the more respectable part of his friends! Some people, if we were to judge from their habits, and their homes, seem to have been born out of due time; they look as if the era of their existence were the reign of chaos. Order is heaven's first law, and the laws of heaven certainly should govern the habitations of its ministers. If a mother, a minister's wife should strive to excel in every maternal excellence. How often is it the case, that a minister's children are talked of almost to a proverb, for their rudeness, ill behaviour, and wickedness; in such instances, much blame must be attached to the mother.

In her own personal character, there are two traits which should appear with peculiar prominence, and shine with attractive lustre in a minister's wife; these are PIETY and PRUDENCE. Her piety should not only be sincere, but ardent: not only unsuspected, but eminently conspicuous. Her habits, her conversation, her whole deportment, should bear the deep, bright impress of heaven. She should be the holiest, most spiritual woman in the church. Her prudence should equal her piety. Without the former, even the latter, however distinguished, would only half qualify her for her important station. Her prudence should display itself in all her conduct towards her husband. She should be very careful not to render him dissatisfied with the situation he occupies. Many a minister has been rendered uncomfortable in a situation of considerable usefulness, or has been led to quit it against the convictions of his judgment, by the capricious prejudices of his wife; whose ambition has aspired to something higher, or whose love of change has coveted something new. A minister's wife should consult her husband's usefulness, and be willing to live in any situation, however self-denying its circumstances may prove, where this is promoted; and considering the influence she has over his decisions, she should be very careful how she employs it in those seasons when a change is meditated. Her prudence should render her extremely careful, not to prejudice her husband's mind against any individual who may have, designedly or unintentionally, injured her. In not a few cases, have pastors been drawn into contention with some of their friends, by the imprudent conduct of their wives, who, possessing a morbid sensibility of offence, have reported, amidst much exaggeration, affronts which they ought not to have felt—or feeling, ought to have concealed. Instead of acting as a screen, to prevent these petty vexations from reaching his ear, they have rendered their tongues a conductor, to convey them to his bosom. They should hide many things of this kind, which it is not important he should know, and soften others of which he cannot be ignorant.

In all cases where her husband is the direct object of a supposed or real injury, a minister's wife should be very cautious how she acts. Intended by nature, and inclined by affection, to be a partisan and an advocate in her husband's case, so far as truth and holiness will allow, she should at the same time endeavour, rather to mitigate than exasperate the displeasure of his mind. Her breath in such cases, if imprudently employed, may fan a flame which in its progress may consume all the prosperity of the church, and half the reputation of her husband. Let her therefore govern her own spirit, as the best means of aiding to govern his. Let her calm, conciliate, and direct that mind, which may be too much enveloped in the mist of passion, to guide itself. Let her not go from house to house, dropping sparks and scintillations from a tongue set on fire of hell. If her husband be the head of a party, let her not envenom their minds with bitter words, which are sure to be rendered still more bitter, by the lying reporters who carry them to the opposite party. Prudence in a pastor's wife would have often saved a church from division.

A minister's wife should never betray the confidence reposed in her by her husband, and report the opinions, views, and feelings, which he has communicated in the seasons of their private conversation. The secrets he deposits in her bosom, are to be as sacredly preserved and guarded, as the ring, which, on the morning of their union, he placed upon her finger.

Prudence is to be displayed in all her conduct towards the church. Probably, the chief part of prudence lies, in a proper government of the tongue; a virtue in which the female part of the human race have not been supposed greatly to excel. A very large proportion of the disturbances which agitate the surface, and extend their influence to the very depths of society, arise from imprudent language. There appears to be in one half of society, an incurable propensity to relate what is to the disadvantage of their neighbours; and in the other half, an indestructible appetite to relish the slander, when it is reported. Now a minister's wife should most anxiously guard against this propensity in herself, and most assiduously labour to abate this appetite in others. Let her, wherever she goes, remember, that there are many waiting and watching for her words, which they will be sure to reverberate with the mimicry, though not with the fidelity, of an echo. Let her tongue never deal in sarcasm, satire, invective, censure, or slander. Let it be an invariable rule with her, TO SPEAK ILL OF NO ONE. She should never appear fond of receiving ill reports from others. If she have a taste of this kind, gratification enough will be found her. Like a queen bee, she has no need to roam abroad in quest of honey—she may sit at home in indolent repose, while the whole hive of gossips and tattlers will collect for her an exuberant supply. Let her rather discourage these humming, busy insects, and convince them that she has neither ear for their buzz, nor taste for their honey.

Let her never betray a secret, which she has been compelled to receive; nor become umpire between two contending parties, since, in whatever way her decision is pronounced, she is almost sure to offend one of them. She should avoid, as much as possible, the appearance of favouritism. Some there must be, with whom she will be more intimate than others; but this fact, if it be known, should be but little seen; and her friends should be always such, as by the common consent of the society would be allotted to her; of course, they should not be minions selected to sustain the character of fawning sycphants, purveyors of news, or tools of selfishness. In all her deportment towards the church, she should maintain a dignified, though not a proud consciousness of her station, blended with the greatest affability and affection. The law of kindness should be on her lips, and all her conduct should be so many displays of the meekness of wisdom. Her dignity should prevent the highest from being obtrusive, her kindness should make the lowest feel that she is accessible. Without being a busy body and meddling with the concerns of others, she should make the interests of her friends her own. Her advice and assistance should always be granted when asked, but never distributed in a way that would render it unwelcome and little valued. Over all institutions which have been formed in the congregation, with a more direct reference to the relief of female necessities, she ought to preside with wisdom, meekness, and zeal. Her influence should be discreetly exerted in forming the general and pious habits of the younger females. She should be the friend of the poor, and be often seen in the chambers of those of her own sex, when they are visited with sickness. With so much to engage her attention, she will have little leisure for visits of useless show, or expensive intercourse. Such she ought not to be expected to keep up, for her time can be more usefully and piously employed. For visits of mere gossip, or etiquette, she ought not to be put in requisition ; and if she is, she should resist the attempt which is thus made to enslave her by the bonds of fashion or of folly. She is the wife of a man, whose master is God—whose business, the salvation of souls—whose scene of labour, the church of Christ—and the consequences of whose exertions, whether they succeed or fail, are infinite and eternal ; LET HER ACT ACCORDINGLY.

II. The deacons.

The institution of the deacon's office arose from a seemingly accidental circumstance which occurred in the church at Jerusalem, the particulars of which are recorded in the 6th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.* The original design of this office, was to administer the bounty of the church. The first deacons were simply the almoners of their brethren. They dispensed the

* Some persons are of opinion that this occurrence was not the origin of the deacon's office, and that the individuals there mentioned, are to be viewed, not as officers of the church, but merely as stewards of a public charity, who were appointed for a special occasion, and not as a general and authoritative precedent. It is said, in support of this opinion, that these individuals are not called deacons by the sacred historian, and that, in consequence, they cannot be proved to have been such. It is also contended, that St. Paul does not specify, in his epistle to Timothy, the duties of a deacon in such a way as to identify the office, with what Luke, in 6th charities of the rich, for the relief of the poor. And this, whatever has been added by the usages of the churches, must still be considered as its paramount duty. What a lovely and attractive view does it give us of Christianity, and how strikingly characteristic of its merciful genius, to behold it solemnly instituting an office, the chief design of which is, the comfort of its poorer followers! Where shall we find any thing analogous to this in other systems? Paganism and Mahometanism have nothing like it.

of Acts, has stated to be the duties of the individuals there selected for the primitive church.

In reply to this, I contend that this was the origin of the deacon's office, and on the following grounds:

1st. Ecclesiastical history informs us, that the office was always considered from the very earliest ages, as designed for the relief of the poor. If so, how natural is it to trace up its origin to the circumstance alluded to, which so easily accounts for it.

2nd. The solemnity with which the seven persons were set apart to their office, i. e. with prayer and imposition of hands, looks as if their appointment was to be considered as a standing and authoritative precedent.

3d. If this be not the origin of the deacon's office, where shall we find the account? and what is still stronger, if this be not the institution, St. Paul has given directions about an office, the duties of which are, in that case, not mentioned in the Word of God. He has certainly said nothing himself of its design, a cir-

By a reference to the origin of the office, we shall learn how widely some religious communities have departed from the design of this simple, merciful, and useful institution. "Those who perverted all church order," says Dr. Owen, "took out of the hands and care of the deacons, that work which was committed to them by the Holy Ghost in the apostles, and for which end alone their office was instituted in the church, and assigned other work unto them, whereunto they were not called, and appointed. And whereas, when all things were swelling with pride cumstance, which is strongly presumptive of the truth of my view of the case, since his silence seems to imply that the duties of the deacon were already too well known to need that he should specify them. His very omission is grounded on some previous institution. Where shall we find this, but in Acts vi. ?

4th. The reason of the appointment in question, is of permanent force, i. e. that those who minister in the Word, should not have their attention diverted by temporal concerns; and, therefore, seems as if a permanent office was then established.

5th. I would ask any one who takes a different view from that which I hold, what are the duties of the deacons mentioned by Paul? If he reply, as I think he must, "To attend to the concerns of the poor," I would still inquire how he knows that. If he answer, The testimony of ecclesiastical history—I would still ask, On what the immemorial usage of the church could be founded, if not on the fact mentioned by Luke in the Acts of the Apostles ?

and ambition in the church, no sort of its officers contenting themselves with their primitive institution, but striving by various degrees to be somewhat in name and thing, that was high and aloft, there arose from the name of this office the meteor of an arch deacon, with strange power and authority never heard of in the church for many ages. But this belongs to the mystery of iniquity, whereunto neither the scripture nor the practice of the primitive churches, do give the least countenance. But some think it not inconvenient to sport themselves in matters of church order and constitutions.”*

The church of England, which retains many of the corruptions of her relation at Rome, has imitated her in the total alteration of this office. In that communion the deacon is not a secular but a spiritual officer, and his post is considered as the first grade in the ascent to the episcopal throne. He is a preacher, and may baptize, but not administer the eucharist. He is, in fact, half priest, half layman, and does not altogether put off the laic, nor put on the cleric character, till his second ordination to the full orders of the priesthood. The church-warden and the overseer share between them the office of the deacon.

* Dr. Owen on Church Government, 4to. 184.

Abuses of this office, however, are not confined to the churches of Rome and of England, but may be found in the ecclesiastical polity of those who separate from both. What is the deacon of some of our independent communities? Not simply the laborious, indefatigable, tender-hearted dispenser of the bounty of the church, the inspector of the poor, the comforter of the distressed; no, but "the bible of the minister, the patron of the living, and the wolf of the flock;" an individual, who, thrusting himself into the seat of government, attempts to lord it over God's heritage, by dictating alike to the pastor and the members; who thinks that in virtue of his office, his opinion is to be law in all matters of church government, whether temporal or spiritual. This man is almost as distant from the deacon of apostolic times, as the deacon of the Vatican. Such men there have been, whose spirit of domination in the church has produced a kind of diaconophobia in the minds of many ministers, who have suffered most wofully from their bite, and have been led to resolve to do without them altogether, rather than be worried any more.* Hence it is, that in some cases the unscriptural plan of committees have been resorted to, that the tyranny of deacons might be avoided.

* The author writes from observation, not from experience; besides the eight deacons with whom he acts at present, he has already outlived eight more, and both the dead and the living have been his comfort and joy.

I do beseech those who bear this office to look to its origin, and learn that it is an office of service, which gives no authority, or power, or rule in the church, beyond the special work for which it is appointed, and that is, to provide for the comfort of the poorer brethren. This is their business. It is true, that by the usages of our churches, many things have been added to the duties of the office, beyond its original design; but this is mere matter of expediency.

It is often said that the duty of the office is to serve tables: the table of the Lord, the table of the minister, and the table of the poor. If it be meant that this was the design of its appointment, I deny the statement, and affirm that the table of the poor, is the deacon's appropriate and exclusive duty. Whatever is conjoined with this, is extra diaconal service, and vested in the individual, merely for the sake of utility. Such increase of their duties I admit is wise and proper. We need persons to take care of the comfort of the minister—to provide for the holy feast of the Lord's supper—to superintend the cleaning and lighting of the house of God—to direct the arrangements of all matters connected with public worship; and who so proper for this, as the brethren who already fill an office, which is secular in its nature and design? But these are all additions to the paramount duty of the deacon, which is to take care of the poor.

Let it not be thought, that this is exhibiting the office in a naked, and meagre, and degrading point of view; or as shorn of the beams of its brightest glory. What can be a more happy or more honourable employment, than to distribute the alms of the brethren, and visit the habitations of the poor, like angels of mercy, with words of peace upon their lips, and the means of comfort in their hands? A faithful, laborious, affectionate deacon, must necessarily become the object of justly deserved regard in the church, and be looked up to with the esteem and veneration, which are paid by a grateful dependent family to their sire. The poor will tell him their wants and woes, spiritual and temporal; and ask his advice with implicit confidence. He will move through the orbit of his duty amidst the prayers and praises of his brethren, and in measure may adopt the language of Job—"When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, then it gave witness to me; because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor, and the cause which I knew not, I searched out." Surely, surely, here is honour, much pure, legitimate, exalted honour, without the deacon's endeavouring to gain the forbidden splendour of official pride or tyranny. Such a man must be, and ought to be a person of influence in the society; but it is the influence of character, of goodness, of usefulness. Let him have his periodical visitations of the poor. Let him go and see their wants and woes in their own habitations, as well as bid them come and tell their sorrows in his. Let him be full of compassion and tender hearted; let his eyes drop pity, while his hands dispense bounty; let him be affable and kind as well as attentive. And such a man shall want neither honour nor power amongst his brethren, although, at the same time, he be peaceful as a dove, meek as a lamb, and gentle as a little child.

I have already said, that for the sake of expediency, all the temporal affairs should be confided to the hands of the deacons,—but then in all but what relates to the distribution of the alms of the church, they ought to render a most faithful account, even to the last farthing of property, to the brethren. Their account ought to be annually laid before the subscribing members of the church, and to receive their approbation. A regard to their own reputation as well as to propriety, and general satisfaction, should dictate this. The utmost fairness and openness should ever be manifested by those who manage the temporalities of religious societies.

The apostle is very explicit in his statement of the qualifications which the deacons should possess. "Likewise must the deacons be grave," i. e. men of serious and dignified deportment; "not double tongued," i. e. sincere, not addicted to duplicity of speech; "not given to much wine; not greedy of filthy lucre; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience," i. e. attached to the doctrines of the gospel, and exhibiting their holy influence in a spotless life: "and let them also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. Let them be the husband of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well." 1 Tim. iii. 8—13. *

* The allusion made to the deacon's wives, appears to me to be a mistranslation, and in the original refers to a class of female office bearers in the primitive church. "Even so the women." As the manners of the Greeks and Romans, and especially of the Asiatics, did not permit men to have much intercourse with women of character, unless they were relations, it was proper that an order of female assistants should be instituted for visiting and privately instructing the young of their own sex, and for catechising females of any age. And as the church was then much persecuted,

Deacons should remember, that all these qualifications should be found embodied in each individual, holding the office; and not merely some in one and some in another, till the character is formed by the joint number, but not by each member of the deaconry. Some have contended for plurality of elders in a church, because it is impossible to find all the qualifications of a Christian bishop stated by the apostle, in one person. We are to look for one excellence in one man, and another in the second, and what is wanting in one will be made up in another, until their defects and attainments are made to tally and unite, like the corresponding parts and many of its members were often condemned to languish in a prison, these holy women were no doubt peculiarly useful in visiting the captive Christians, and performing for them many kind offices which their sex can best render. Such an one, in all probability, was Phebe, mentioned Rom. xvi. 1. Such were the widows spoken of 1 Tim. v. Such were Euodia and Syntyche, Phil. iv. 3. Clement of Alexandria, reckons widows amongst ecclesiastical persons. "There are many precepts in scripture for those who are chosen, some for priests, others for bishops, others for deacons, others for widows." Pliny, in his celebrated Epistle to Trajan, is thought to refer to deaconesses, when, speaking of two female Christians whom he put to the torture, he says, "quæ ministræ dicebantur:" i. e. who were called deaconesses.

of a dovetail joint. I confess, however, that this way of making church officers, as it were by patch work, appears to me a most absurd idea.

The deacons from their being officers in the church, although their office is of a secular nature, and also from their being generally acquainted with the affairs of the church, will be considered by every wise and prudent minister, as his privy council in his spiritual government, and should be always ready to afford him, in a modest, respectful, and unobtrusive manner, their advice. They must not, however, dictate. If they do, he must RESIST. "Christian brethren," said a preacher on this subject, "give to the minister I love, for a deacon, a man in whose house he may sit down at ease, when he is weary and loaded with care; into whose bosom he may freely pour his sorrows, and by whose lips he may be soothed when he is vexed and perplexed; by whose illuminated mind he may be guided in difficulty; and by whose liberality and cordial co-operation, he may be animated and assisted in every generous undertaking." And I would add, who would do all this in the spirit of humble, modest, and unauthoritative affection; who would not make his kindness and assistance a cloak for his tyranny; nor a silken web to wind around the fetters he is preparing for the slavery of his pastor.

In the transactions of church business, the deacons should exert no other influence than that which arises from the esteem and affection in which they are held by the people. All personal and official authority should be abstained from. Their opinion should ever be stated with pre-eminent modesty; for if it be a wise one, its wisdom will commend itself to the judgment of the people, whose hearts are already prepared by affection and esteem to yield to its influence. Whereas, the wisest opinion, if delivered with the dogmatism of official pride, will often be resisted, merely because it is attempted to be imposed.

If a man deserve influence, he will be sure to have it without seeking it, or designedly exerting it; if he do not deserve it, and still seek, he is sure to be resisted.

“The deacon’s duty to the people, is to promote, so far as he is able, the happiness of individuals, and the welfare of the society. In his intercourse with them, he should be firm and unbending in principle, but kind and conciliatory in temper and in manner. In those parts of his office, which are sometimes very irksome and arduous, from the difficulty of serving all according to their wishes, he should guard against every thing which even appears to be harsh and unkind. More especially should he do this, when he finds it impossible, in consistency with his duty to others, to fulfil their desires. The apparently insignificant circumstance, which will often occur in our congregations, of being unable to accommodate an individual, or a family, with a seat, may be mentioned with so much kindness, and with such unfeigned regret that it is so, as to lead the individual, or the family, patiently to wait for a more favourable opportunity; or it may be done, although without design, in a tone of so much indifference, as to lead the disappointed applicant to relinquish the hope of success, and to leave the place. The secret charm by which the deacon's office may be rendered comfortable to himself, and beneficial to others, is that golden precept of inspiration, "Let all your things be done with charity;" or as Dr. Doddridge better translates the passage, "Let all your affairs be transacted in love."—1 Cor. xvi. 14.

III. Heads of families.

The station occupied by such persons, is exceedingly important, and therefore very responsible. We naturally look to the families of professing Christians for the materials with which the "spiritual house" is to be repaired amidst the spoliations of sin and death. A large proportion of our members are the children of the righteous, and our churches would be still more enriched with the fruits of domestic piety, if that piety itself were more ardent and more exemplary. It is impossible to urge in terms too strong, the sacred duties of Christian masters, mistresses, and parents. Their influence on the prosperity of the church is greater than is generally conceived, or can be fully stated. The duties of such persons are of a two-fold nature :

1. The primary ones, of course, relate to your CHILDREN. It is the command of God to train them up in the fear, and nurture, and admonition of the Lord. Let your first, and deepest, and most lasting solicitude be for the formation of their religious character, and the salvation of their souls. Let this regulate all your conduct towards them. Let it impel you to adopt a system of instruction and discipline, which shall have a close and constant bearing on their moral and religious habits. Let it guide you in the choice of schools where they are to be educated, the families into which they are to be apprenticed. Act so, as that they may clearly discern, that your most ardent prayer, your most anxious concern, is that they may be truly pious. They should see this interwoven with all your conduct towards them : and behold a uniform, consistent, constant effort to accomplish this object. Let them hear it expressed in your advice and prayers, and see it manifested in all your arrangements. Alas ! alas ! how many children of church members are there, who, if they were asked the question, "What is your father and mother's chief concern for you?" would be obliged to reply, "That I might excel in fashionable accomplishments, and make a figure in the drawing room." There appears to me to be at the present moment, a most criminal neglect on the part of Christian parents, of the RELIGIOUS education of their children. Every thing is sacrificed to the lighter and more frivolous accomplishments of the female character, and to the literary and scientific acquisitions of boys. Religion is a secondary matter. But ought it to be so? Ought it not rather to be, the one thing needful for our children as well as for ourselves?

That Christian who would carry on a system of religious education with success, should enforce it with all the commanding influence of a HOLY EXAMPLE. Let your children see all the "beauties of holiness" reflected from your character, and the grand outline of Christian morality filled up with all the delicate touches and varied colouring of the Christian temper. The heathens had their Penates, or little shrines of their gods, which they kept in their own habitation, to remind them of the objects of their religious veneration and trust. Be you to your families, instead of these household gods, by being lovely images of the great Jehovah. Let your children have this conviction in their hearts,

“If there be but two real Christians in the world, my father is one, and my mother is the other.” It is dreadful, but not uncommon for children to employ themselves, in contrasting the appearance which their parents make at the Lord’s table, and at their own; in the house of God, and at home.

FAMILY PRAYER should be performed with great punctuality, constancy, and seriousness. It is of course presumed that every Christian does pray with his household. It should not be performed so late in the evening that the family are more fit for sleep than devotion, nor so late in the morning, as for business to interrupt it. It should ever be conducted with the most solemn devotion, and never rendered tedious by extreme length. It should be very simple, and have special reference to the case of the children and the servants. That it might be performed with regularity, heads of families should rarely sup from home. It is a disgrace for a Christian master or parent to be often seen in the streets at eleven o’clock at night.

Professing Christians should resist the entrance of worldly conformity into their families. Expensive entertainments, gay parties, vain and frivolous amusements, showy modes of dress, should be most cautiously avoided. Religion will not dwell amidst such scenes; her refined and spiritual taste is soon offended, and she retires. A Christian's habits should be simple and spiritual. If it be his aim, to approach as nearly as possible, to the manners of the world without actually being numbered with its votaries, his children will be restrained with difficulty on the right side of the line of demarcation, and be perpetually longing and trying to push onward. The miserable efforts, made by some professing Christians, to be thought people of taste and fashion; to live half way between the tradesman and the gentleman, show how ill they bear the Christian yoke, and how nearly they are resolved to cast it away as an encumbrance. We should despise these things wherever we see them, if they did not prefer claims upon our pity, still stronger than those upon our scorn. When a worldly temper has crept into the circle of a Christian church, piety retires before it, and the spirit of error soon enters to take possession of the desolate heritage.

2. There is another duty which devolves on those whom Providence has placed at the head of a family, and that relates to their DOMESTICS.

Heads of families should manifest a kind solicitude for the temporal comfort of their domestics, and especially a deep solicitude for their spiritual welfare. They should take care that they are provided with Bibles, and furnished with a few religious books to peruse on the Sabbath, and at other intervals of leisure. In every respectable habitation, there should certainly be a kitchen library, comprising a few plain, interesting, moral, and religious treatises. Great care should be taken, in the arrangement of domestic affairs, to afford opportunities to their households, to attend the solemnities of public worship. It is too common to allow them this privilege, only in the afternoon, which is a part of the day least favourable to religious instruction and impression. Is not this a most cruel deprivation? If the heads of a family find the afternoon a dull and profitless season, how much more so must it be to them, who, to the labour of the week, have added that of the Sabbath morning!

And why cannot the domestics be permitted to go to worship on the Sabbath morning? O! tell it not in Gath, because they are kept at home to cook a dinner for the parlour. Shame and disgrace on that professing Christian, who will not forego the gratifications of his palate, though it be to aid in the salvation of souls. How can he enjoy the roasted joint, when he remembers that one of the family has been, at his command, devoting the Lord's day to prepare the feast? He comes from the house of God, perhaps from the sacramental table, and in the hearing of his domestics, talks of the precious season he has experienced; while they revile, as mere disgusting cant, the religious conversation of a man, who would rob the souls of others, to pamper his appetite. Such men are worse than Esau; he sold his own birthright for the gratification of his palate, but they sell the birthright of others. Yes, the Sabbath is their birthright, or rather is granted to them by charter from God; and no man can alienate the sacred gift from them, without committing a felony of the worst kind. Is it not enough, that they labour for our comfort six days in the week, but they must also have the seventh, the season of repose, taken from them?

Great, very great reproach is frequently brought upon religion, by the manner in which many professors conduct themselves towards those, who have claims upon them for something more than their wages. It has been said that no man is great in the eyes of his valet. I am afraid that the sentiment admits of extension, and that it might be said, that few men are exemplary for piety in the eyes of their servants.

IV. Domestic.

There is no class of church members, for whom I feel more anxious, than for domestics. Cut off in a considerable degree, by their very situation, from pastoral attentions; urged forward in a course of labour, which in many cases has no intervals of rest; often most cruelly deprived of the repose of the Sabbath; it is difficult, indeed, for them to keep up the power, or enjoy the consolations of personal religion. They have peculiar need to watch, lest the flame of piety should languish and expire in their hearts.

It is quite interesting to observe how particular the apostle is in his direction to servants. "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart as unto Christ: not with eye service, as men pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good will doing service as to the Lord, and not to men." Eph. vi. 5—7. The same sentiments are repeated, Col. iii. 22—25. Titus ii. 9, 10. It is to such that the solemn and striking admonition is addressed, "to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." Even the sublime doctrine of a redeeming God, that bright effulgence which has issued from the fountain of light, is susceptible of decoration, and receives its adorning from the consistent conduct, not merely of a religious monarch, philosopher, or scholar, but of a Christian servant. The most scrupulous honesty, the most unwearied diligence, the most humble submission, the most inviolable truth, are necessary to this. Servants should make the interests of the family their own, and act in all things towards their employer's property as if they were its possessors. The apostle has laid uncommon stress upon servants being uniformly the same for fidelity, and honesty, and diligence, whether in the presence or absence of their employers. All they do, even the most ordinary duties of their station, is to be done as to the Lord, and he is every where present. Their religion should be distinctly seen in the manner of performing the duties of their station; and it should be obvious that their piety has improved them as servants.

Where they are placed in irreligious families, "let them count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed." 1 Tim. vi. 1. Let them not feel at liberty to treat their employers with contempt and neglect, as mere carnal persons; for religion does not abolish the distinctions of society, nor the rights connected with them. I scarcely know one character in the private walks of life, that has a fairer opportunity to glorify God, than a religious servant in an ungodly family. It will be a fine testimony to the excellence of piety, when we shall hear even irreligious persons generally say, "We will never have, if we can help it, any but religious servants, for we have seen that piety renders them faithful, humble, diligent, and trust worthy."

"They that have believing masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren, but rather do them service because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit." 1

Tim. vi. 2. They are not in such circumstances to abate one iota of that reverence and obedience which are due to them : for though by the law of Christ they are brethren, this does not destroy their superiority. It is no uncommon thing for religious servants to manifest such a degree of consequence, and to expect so much deference, as to lead some heads of families to say, that they would rather have good moral servants, than religious ones. In some cases where they have been deprived, not by any capricious, or arbitrary arrangement, but the unavoidable necessities of the family, from enjoying so many opportunities as they could wish ; when they have been unexpectedly deprived of the privilege of attending public worship, perhaps only for a single season, they have manifested so much petulance, and entered upon their home duties with so much sullen reluctance and ill humour, that their religion, or rather I ought to say, their want of it, has become a source of disgust and uneasiness. The means of grace ought to be valued and improved, but the occasional and unavoidable loss of them should not be attended with the destruction of the Christian temper.

It would be well, on entering upon a place, to have an understanding with employers, on the subject of attendance at public worship. This would prevent all disagreement afterwards, or would at least furnish a compact to which reference might be made in future. It cannot surely be necessary to admonish such as make a profession of religion, never to go into any situation, whatever pecuniary advantages may present themselves, in which they are prevented from attending the public means of grace. That person cannot really seek, first the kingdom of God, who, for the sake of higher wages, would go into a place, which excludes all enjoyment of the Sabbath, and the house of God, and almost all opportunities of private prayer. Those who have obtained comfortable situations, should be anxious to retain them, for it is not creditable to their profession, to be often changing places. It would also be honourable to their characters, to be ever distinguished for neatness rather than gaudiness of attire. A love for dress is censurable in all professing Christians, but most of all, in those whose means scarcely enable them to command the vanities of this world. How much more would it be to their honour and comfort, to lay by a portion of their wages for a time of need.

V. Young persons.

These generally form a very considerable class of our members, and have duties to perform appropriate to their age and station. They should be very watchful against the sins to which the ardour and inexperience of their years may expose them. They should flee youthful lusts, and be very cautious to abstain from vanity and self conceit. Their introduction at so early a period to the church, is very apt in some cases, to inflate them with pride, to invest them with self-importance, and impair that modesty of deportment, which is the loveliest ornament of their character. In all their conduct towards the church, there should be an amiable retiredness of disposition. They should be seen at the church meetings, but very rarely heard. It is difficult to conceive of a more disgusting or mischievous spectacle, than a young member dogmatically stating his opinion, and pertinaciously enforcing it, before men, who were grey in the service of God, before his head was covered with the down of infancy.

Young Christians should be very careful not to form matrimonial connexions, in opposition to the apostolic injunction, "not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Both reason and revelation unite their testimony against the practice of Christians marrying irreligious persons. What an interruption to conjugal comfort, what an obstacle to domestic piety, what an injury to the cause of religion, does such a practice bring with it!

There is one way, in which young Christians may bring great reproach upon the cause of God, and that is by engaging the affections of a female, and then abandoning her. This is a species of cruelty which certainly deserves, and always receives the severest reprobation. It is dishonourable in a man of the world, much more in a church member.

VI. Rich members.

It is true our churches do not abound with such persons; but enriched as our cause is, with the principles of divine truth, and patronised by the smiles of Heaven, we can dispense with the blazonry and patronage of secular distinctions.

There are men, however, who amidst the accumulations of increasing wealth, remain firmly attached to the principles of the gospel, and who delight to lavish their fortunes in supporting the cause they love and espouse. Let them consider it as their incumbent duty, to consecrate no small portion of their affluence, not merely in propagating the principles of christianity abroad, but upholding the cause of truth at home. The erection of chapels, the support of seminaries, the maintenance of poor ministers, the establishment of churches, should with them be an object of deep anxiety.

Let them, in order to abound more and more in such efforts, as well as to exhibit a bright example of pure and undefiled religion, avoid all unnecessary worldly conformity, and all expensive modes of living. Something is due to their rank and station, but more than is necessary, ought not to be conceded. There is in the present age a disposition, even in professing Christians, to a showy and expensive style of living, which cannot be more effectually repressed, than by the plain and simple habits of those who are known to have an easy access to all the elegancies and splendours of life. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." Such was the admonition of St. Paul to Timothy, from which we gather, that rich Christians ought to be far more anxious to lay out than to lay up their fortunes. When we enter their mansions and see magnificence in every room, luxury on every table; when we see their gay equipage, we cannot help saying, "How much ought a disciple of Jesus, who lives in this manner, to give away to the cause of religion and humanity, before he is justified in such an expenditure." There appears to me to be yet wanting, a proportionate liberality on the part of the rich. Their efforts bear no comparison with those of the middling classes, and of the poor. The former give of their abundance, the latter of their little; at most, the former only tax their luxuries, but the latter, their comforts and necessaries.

Rich Christians should be exceedingly attentive to the wants and comforts of their poorer brethren. There is a great lack of this, in the churches of Christ. "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" 1 John iii. 17. Such persons should carefully and tenderly inquire into the condition of the poor, and not content themselves with a monthly contribution at the Lord's supper, to be disposed of by the deacons. And it would be well if the deacons were often to go to the habitations of the more affluent members of the church, and lay before them the case of their destitute brethren.

The more wealthy members should be very cautious not to assume undue power in the government of the church. The distinctions of wealth have no place in the kingdom of Christ. No haughty airs, no proud scorn of the opinions of others less affluent than themselves, no overbearing urgency in stating their own views, should ever be discovered in their conduct in the transaction of church business. Their superior wealth, if not attended with a spirit of domination, is sure in every case to procure for them all the deference that is compatible with the independence of the church.

In short, the vices to which the rich are more particularly exposed, and against which they should vigilantly guard, are, pride, haughtiness, love of money, idleness, self-indulgence, luxury, worldly conformity, ecclesiastical domination, and oppression of the poor. The virtues they are called to exercise are, gratitude to God, humility and condescension to men, economy, temperance, and liberality, together with tender sympathy to their poorer brethren, and a generous regard to the support of the cause of pure religion, and general benevolence.

VII. The poor.

Contentment with such things as they have, and an unmurmuring submission to the appointment of Providence, are most obviously their duty, and should be conspicuously manifested in all their deportment. It should not appear as if they thought it hard, that their lot was cast in the humble vale of poverty. A cheerful resignation to the irremediable ills of their station, a frame of mind that looks as if they were so grateful for the blessings of grace, as to be almost insensible to the privations of poverty, is one of the ways in which poor Christians may signally glorify God.

The poor should watch against an envious spirit. "Grudge not one against another," said the apostle. They should be conspicuous for their industry, nor wish to eat the bread of idleness. "For this is commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat. For some walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy bodies. Such we command and exhort by the Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread." 2 Thes. iii. 10—12. The poor have no right, therefore, to expect, that in consequence of their association with a Christian church, they are in any measure released from the obligation of the most unwearied industry. They are not to be supported by the society, in idleness, nor ought they to look for any pecuniary allowance while able to provide for themselves and their family. The religion of Jesus Christ was never intended to establish a system of religious pauperism. It is to be feared, that not a few have entered into Christian fellowship, on purpose to share its funds. This is an awful case, wherever it occurs, and should make all the poor members of our churches tremble at the most distant approximation to such a crime.

The only times in which members should feel that they have claims upon the funds collected at the Lord's supper, are, when sickness has entered their dwelling, when age has incapacitated them for labour, or when the produce of their industry is too scanty to procure the necessary comforts of life.*

* It is a question that has been sometimes agitated, whether it is right for a church to allow the members to apply for assistance from the town. Such a question however may be set at rest by a law, which, where it really exists, allows of no farther appeal; I mean the law of necessity. Some churches are composed in a great measure of poor persons, and even of the remainder who are not poor, there are few above the rank of small tradesmen. In this case, when trade is bad, and disease is prevalent, it is next to impossible, if not quite so, for the church to relieve all the wants of its members. But setting aside this extreme case, what law is violated, what obligation is broken through, by our members applying for a portion of that property, which is collected for them no less than others, and to which they are legally entitled in common with others? There can be nothing wrong on the part of the poor themselves in applying for this relief, unless they are so well provided for by the church as not to need it. In this case their application would be manifestly an imposition. The only question is, whether a church, tolerably favoured with affluent numbers, ought to allow such application. It would certainly be an act of great generosity in such a church, to render their members independent of assistance from the town: but I do not see by what law this is actually their duty. We stand in a double relationship to the poor, as fellow-citizens and fellow-Christians; in our former connexion we may ask for them a share of a civil fund, while in the latter we relieve them from a still more sacred source. The poor

The poor should not be exorbitant in their expectations of relief; and should the bounty of the church flow less freely towards them than they have reason and right to look for, they should not indulge in the language of reproach and complaint. Not that they are forbidden in mild and modest language to represent their situation to the deacons.

They should be particularly careful not to manifest an encroaching and begging disposition. I have known cases, in which the greatest disgust and the most unconquerable prejudice, have been excited against individuals, by their proneness to beg of every one who visited them, till at length their fellow-members, wearied too soon it must be admitted, with the language of perpetual complaint and petition, have left off to visit them altogether.

Cleanliness is a very incumbent duty of the poor. Their cottages may be lowly, but certainly need not be dirty. Filthiness is one species of vice, and cleanliness is not only next to godliness, but a part of it. The credit of religion often depends on little things, and this is one of them.

by entering our churches do not forfeit any of their civil rights, and since they are legally entitled to the assistance of their fellow-subjects, it is not necessary that we should take upon ourselves as Christians, those burdens which others are bound to sustain as citizens.

VIII. Tradesmen.

A very large number of our church members are engaged in the pursuits of trade, manufacture, or commerce ; and, from their very calling, are exposed to peculiar dangers, which must be met with proportionate vigilance.

It is highly incumbent upon them to take care against a worldly spirit. They are in extreme peril of losing the power of godliness from their hearts, and joining the number of those, of whom it is said in the expressive language of St. Paul, that "they mind earthly things." Such persons look upon the possession of wealth as "the one thing needful." It is their chief object of pursuit, the chief source of happiness. Nothing modifies or mitigates the desire of riches. They are of the earth, earthy. Now certainly a Christian tradesman is, or ought to be, of another spirit than this. He should be industrious, frugal, and persevering in his attention to the concerns of this world ; but still there should be in his mind an ultimate and supreme regard to the possession of everlasting life. He ought not to be slothful in business, but then he must be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. He should be seen to unit the clever tradesman and sincere Christian ; and to be busy for both worlds. The men of this world should be constrained to say of him, "This man is as attentive to business, and as clever in it as we are ; but we can perceive in all he does, an inflexible regard to principle, an invariable reference to religion. We can discover no lack of diligence or prudence ; but it is perfectly evident, that his heart and highest hope are in heaven. He is neither so elated in prosperity, nor so depressed in adversity, as we are. He has some secret source of happiness, of which we are not possessed ; and his eye is upon some standard of action, which we do not recognise. He is a Christian as well as tradesman."

What a testimony ! who can obtain a higher one ? who should seek less ?

There are many snares to which a Christian tradesman is peculiarly exposed in the present mode of conducting business. The stream of trade no longer glides along its old accustomed channel, where established and ordinary causes impelled its motions and guided its course ; but under the violent operation of new and powerful impulses, it has of late years started from its course, and with the rapidity of a torrent or the force of an inundation, has swept away the restraint of religious principle, and carried a deluge of dishonesty over the moral world.

It is quite time for Christian tradesmen, to return in their mode of conducting business, to the sound principles of Christian morality. Let them beware of excessive speculation, and where the property with which they trade, is scarcely their own, let them err rather on the side of caution than of enterprise. Let them beware of all dishonourable means of propping up a sinking credit. Let them view with abhorrence, those practices which are resorted to only by rogues and swindlers. Let them tremble and blush at a single effort to extricate themselves from difficulty, which the world would condemn as unfair or dishonourable. Let their motto be, "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."* Phil. iv. 7.

A Christian should be careful not to conceal too long, the fact of his being in a state of insolvency. A false pride, or a foolish hope, has led many, to the dishonour of their profession, to go on floundering in difficulties, while every struggle has only carried them farther and farther into the current of ruin, till at length their fortune and their character have sunk together, to rise no more. I do not say that a man ought in every case to call his creditors together the moment that he discovers he cannot pay twenty shillings in the pound ; but he certainly ought to do it without delay, as soon as he ceases to hope that he shall ultimately do so.*

* See Dr. Chalmer's admirable sermons on the moral principles of trade.

Every Christian tradesman should be very watchful against those artifices, violations of truth, and unfair advantages, which many resort to in the disposal of their articles. It might indeed have become the general practice ; but tricks of trade, if contrary to truth and honesty, are clear and flagrant violations of religious duty. No prevalence of custom can make that right, which in itself is wrong. The standard of a Christian's morality is the Bible ; and whatever is opposed to that, he must avoid and abhor.

A tradesman who makes a profession of religion, should be most eminent for justice, truth, honour, and generosity, in all his dealings. His religion should be seen in all his conduct. "I know nothing of that man's creed," said a person, of a religious tradesman with whom he dealt,

* I think there should be a standing rule in every church, that any member who becomes insolvent, should be suspended from communion, till opportunity has been afforded, to inquire whether his failure has been attended with circumstances dishonourable to his Christian profession. This may be very soon and very easily ascertained. If three or four of the principal creditors are satisfied that his conduct has not been dishonourable, this might be sufficient to satisfy the church in ordinary cases.

“because I never asked him what he believed ; but a more honourable, punctual, generous tradesman, I never met with in my life. I would as soon take his word for a thousand pounds, as I would another man’s bond for a shilling. Whatever he promises he performs, and to the time also.” This is adorning the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things.

It is very dishonourable, when a Christian tradesman is actuated by a spirit of envy and jealousy towards others, and when he employs ungen-erous means to prevent their success. No one has an exclusive monopoly, except in the case of patents. Others have as much right to live where they like, as we have. It is their world as well as ours : and to employ our wealth in any case to ruin them, by underselling, is a spirit perfectly incompatible with the genius of religion, and the nature of Christian fellowship. Such an envious person deserves excommunication, not only from the church of God, but from the society of rational creatures.

It is perfectly obvious, that the tradesman ought to regulate his expenditure by his income. The man that lives beyond his resources is a robber and a thief. His extravagance is supported by the property of others, and as it is taken without their consent, it is a felony, for which he is answerable, if not at the bar of man, yet certainly at the tribunal of God.

CHAPTER IX.

MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS.

On the true Nature of Church Power.

IN our conversation upon the subject of church government, it is very common to talk of the power, or authority of our churches. But in what does this power really consist, and how far does it extend? Every society has certainly an unquestionable right to regulate all its own temporal and spiritual affairs, to the entire exclusion of all human interference and control whatever. But we must be careful, not to carry the idea of independence so far as to trench upon the dominion of Jesus Christ. The power of a church is simply a right to put their own construction upon the laws of Christ, and to obey his laws, in the way in which they think will be most agreeable to him. This is neither understood nor remembered with as much distinctness as it should be. Hence it is a very usual thing for churches at their stated, or occasional meetings, to consider themselves as met to make laws, and set in order the affairs of the spiritual kingdom; and a great deal is said about "our church," and "the rules that we have established in our church." Our church!! How came it ours? The church is Christ's. The rules we have established!! The sole right of making laws, is with Him to whom the church belongs. The church is a kingdom, of which Christ is sole monarch, the New Testament is his spiritual code, and all the power we have, is to execute the laws which he has already established. In the whole business of church government, we are to acknowledge the authority, and consider ourselves as doing the will of Christ. Nothing is left to our will, to our wisdom, to our caprice; but in all things we are to be guided by the law of Jesus, laid down in his word.

In the choice of officers, in the admission of members, in the exercise of discipline, we are not to act upon views and principles of our own, but are to be guided by those we find in the New Testament. We have no power to legislate, but merely to interpret the law and obey. When we meet, Christ is in the midst of us, not only by his essential presence, but by his revealed will: and every authoritative voice is hushed, but that which speaks to us from the sacred canon. When a member is proposed, we are not to ask, "Is he such an one as we think will add respectability to our communion; is he of long standing in the ways of God; is he peculiar in his habits?" but, "Is he such an one as Christ has received?" When a measure is submitted for our adoption, we are not first to inquire into its policy, but whether it is in exact accordance with the general principles and spirit of the New Testament. Every act of church government must be an explicit acknowledgment of the authority of Jesus, as King in Zion, and an act of obedience to his laws. With respect to all human authority, our power is legislative, but in reference to Christ purely executive.

On the Mode of conducting Church Meetings.

Every well regulated church will have its solemn and stated meetings for conducting the business necessarily connected with its existence and progress. Many ministers have imbibed a prejudice against these meetings, and like Charles the First, who, not finding the parliament as suppliant as he could wish, determined to govern without parliaments altogether, they have resolved to rule without calling the church together, except, at least, on extraordinary emergencies. I admit that church meetings have been abused; but this has been more frequently the fault of the pastor, than the people. They have sometimes exhibited scenes of confusion, little recommendatory of the democratic form of church government. This, however, is not the error of the system, but the improper way in which it is administered. When ignorance or imprudence is elevated to the chair, order and decorum cannot be looked for in the assembly.

It would conduce to the order of church meetings, if it were much inculcated by the pastor, and generally understood by the people, that they were meetings for devotion, and not for debate. They should ever be attended with the usual services of a prayer-meeting, i. e. with singing, supplication, and ministerial exhortation. If business is to be done, it should be thus introduced, and transacted in the spirit, and amidst the services of devotion. These times of assembling should be periodical; for when they are only occasional, they lose the character of devotional seasons, assume the form of business meetings, to which the members come prepared for protracted and general discussion.

All the proceedings at a church meeting should either emanate directly from the pastor, or from others by his previous knowledge and consent. The president of every society, and of every meeting, ought to be acquainted with all the business which is to be transacted by the assembly. He announces and explains the object of their being convened, and regulates the discussions which ensue. Every case, therefore, that is to be laid before the church, should be stated by the pastor, who, like the judge upon the bench, is to show what the law saith touching the business in hand. If this be neglected, and the members are allowed to introduce any business which they please, our church meetings would very soon resemble the scene which was exhibited at the base of the tower of Babel. An attention to this single, simple circumstance, will very much tend to ensure the order and harmony of our meetings.

AS LITTLE DISCUSSION AS IS REALLY POSSIBLE, should take place at our church meetings. The admonition of the apostle is always in season, but never more so than in reference to the times of the assembling of the saints: "Let every man be slow to speak." Nothing but the most obvious necessity, should induce a single individual to utter a syllable; and when any one does deliver his opinion, it should not be in a prating, dogmatical manner, but in few words modestly spoken. Not only the pastor, but the people themselves, should discourage those forward, obtrusive spirits, to whom no music or melody is so pleasant as the sound of their own voice. Talking assemblies, soon become disorderly ones. A wise and prudent minister will set his face against them ; and a wise and prudent church will support him in this conduct.

It is, of course, no less the interest than the duty of the society, to support, at all its meetings, the just and scriptural authority of the pastor. He should never be addressed but in the most courteous and respectful manner, and every expression of rudeness or insult should be marked with the disapprobation of the members present.

On the Admission of Members to the Church.

When an individual is known to be desirous of fellowship, information of this should be conveyed without delay to the pastor, who upon conversing with the person, and making suitable inquiries about his character and conduct, must be considered at liberty, either to mention him as a candidate for fellowship, or not, according as his views shall dictate. No member should presume to bring forward a candidate, in opposition to the opinion of the pastor. It is of course to be expected, that he will never reject an individual, but upon grounds, which appear to him to be quite sufficient, and which he will, without hesitation or reserve, communicate to the person himself.

On the part of the church, there is sometimes a very unscriptural reluctance to receive persons into membership, till after they have had a long trial of their Christian steadfastness and integrity. It is very common for some members to exclaim in surprise, when the name of a candidate is mentioned to them in secret, "What, is he going to be proposed to the church? why, he has not been converted three months." I wish these over-cautious Christians to tell me, what length of time ought to elapse after conversion, and before the individual is introduced to communion? Has Jesus Christ stated any term of probation, which we must pass through before we are received into the church? Certainly not. What right then have we to fix upon any? Is it not establishing terms of communion, which he has not established? Is not this a direct invasion of his authority? If we consult the precedents furnished by the practice of the apostles, they most decisively condemn the overstrained caution of those, who would put a Christian upon the trial of a year or two, before he is admitted to communion. The very day in which a man professed himself a Christian, he was added to the church. In fact, his joining himself to the church, was his profession. I would have every step taken to inquire into the knowledge, faith, and conduct of an individual who proposes himself for fellowship; and if they are satisfactory, I would admit him, although he had been converted but a single month; and I call upon the person who would refuse to join in such admission, to show on what ground he acts. Let him not talk about the necessity of caution, and the possibility of being deceived; this is very true, but it must not be allowed to interfere with the rules, which Christ has laid down for the government of his church. Our views of policy cannot improve his institutions, and ought not to oppose the practice of his apostles. The rule of our proceeding is simply this, "We must receive those whom we think the Lord hath received." Abandon this rule, and we have no directory for our conduct. One person may think a year's trial enough, but another may think two years' necessary. It is truly shocking, to see how many excellent and exemplary Christians are kept by some churches month after month at a distance from the fellowship of the faithful, under the pretence of trying their steadfastness. "We must not take the children's bread," say these ultra cautious disciples, "and cast it to the dogs." Nor have you a right to starve the children, any more than you have to pamper the dogs. Our rule is this, "evidence of personal religion, whether that evidence be the result of a month or a year."

The Lord's supper is intended no less for babes, than fathers in Christ; and who will contend that the right way to treat a new born infant, is to neglect him, and leave him to himself, to see whether he will live?—to nurse and feed him is the ordained means to preserve his life. It is precisely the same in spirituals as in temporals. And if it be proper to say of a child that died in consequence of neglect, that he would have lived if proper care had been taken, it is not less correct to say of some persons that once appeared hopeful, but afterwards returned to the world, they would have proved honourable Christians, had they not been neglected by the church.

The same unscriptural caution is sometimes displayed towards those converts, who are young in years. It is surprising to see what a panic some members are thrown into, when a young person is proposed as a candidate for fellowship; and if they happen to discover that the youth is only fifteen or sixteen years of age, they seem to feel as if the church was either going to be profaned or destroyed. Is there, then, a canonical age of membership? Is the same rule established in the kingdom of Christ, which is observed in the kingdoms of the world, and every one considered as unfit for the privileges of citizenship, till he arrive at the age of one and twenty? If not, what right have we to speak or think about the age of a candidate? Piety is all we have to inquire into; and whether the individual be fourteen, or fourscore, we are to receive him, provided we have reason to suppose, "that Christ has received him."

The MODE OF ADMISSION is various in different churches. The church is to receive the member, and any mode which they may adopt to ascertain the sincerity of his piety, is lawful, provided that it is not so rigid, as to deter persons from applying for admission. In every case, the church ought to have the means of ascertaining the piety of the individuals; without this there can be no real communion. In some churches the pastor only, examines the candidate: But this is too great a power to delegate to a man, and too great a responsibility for any man willingly to incur.* It is deeply interesting to hear a simple, artless account of sinner's conversion from his own lips; and then by his particularizing the very sermons which were the means of his conversion, he helps in no small degree to raise the pastor in the estimation of the church, by these proofs of his usefulness and success, and to endear him to their hearts.

* In most of our American churches, candidates are required to appear before the assembled church, and detail the methods of grace by which God brought them to his knowledge and service. Ed.

On Discipline.

By discipline, is meant, the right treatment of offending members. The church which neglects this duty, resembles a state in which the administration of justice is omitted, and crime is permitted to be practised with impunity. That part of the design of church union, which consists in mutual watchfulness, is lost; backsliders are encouraged to go farther astray, hypocrites are patronized in their self-delusion, the ruin of men's souls abetted, the society is corrupted, and the honour of religion is compromised. It is this sin which the apostle describes in those awful words, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." The church is that temple, and to defile it, is to introduce improper members to its communion, or to tolerate them in the practice of sin. To suffer offences to be committed from time to time, without being noticed and removed, must be as displeasing in the sight of God, as it would have been, if the Jews had permitted any filthy substances to remain in the temple of Solomon, or had swept the impurities of the sacrifices into the holy of holies. A single unpunished transgressor troubled the whole camp of Israel, and brought calamity upon a nation; nor could the favour of God rest upon the people, till Achan was discovered and destroyed. Nothing can be conceived of, more likely to grieve the Holy Spirit, or to induce him to withdraw his gracious influence from a church, than a neglect of scriptural discipline. And it is worth while to examine, whether this is not one of the causes of the declining state of many Christian societies.

The advantages of discipline are obvious and numerous. It reclaims backsliders, it detects hypocrites, it circulates a secret and salutary awe through the church, supplies an additional incentive to watchfulness and prayer, by exhibiting at once the most affecting proofs of human frailty, and the painful consequences resulting from its exposure; while in addition, it is a public testimony, borne by the church, against all unrighteousness.

Here several things deserve particular consideration.

I. What offences should become subject to discipline.

1. Of course, all scandalous vices and immoralities. "Not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one, no not to eat—put away from yourselves that wicked person," (mentioned verse 1,) 1 Cor. v. 11—13.

2. The denial of essential articles of the Christian faith, and persisting in the error.

“But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel to you than that we have preached, let him be accursed.” Gal. i. 8. “Of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus, who, concerning the truth, have erred, saying the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some—whom I deliver to Satan.” 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. “If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to the words of Christ and sound doctrine, according to godliness—from such withdraw thyself.” 1 Tim. vi. 3—5. “If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed, is a partaker of his deeds.” 2 John 10, 11. Nothing can be more plain than that these passages require us to separate from our communion those who deny what we consider to be the essential articles of our faith. Every church has an indubitable right of determining for themselves, what they consider to be fundamental truths; they should, however, be extremely cautious, not to set up other truths than those which are established in the Word of God. It is difficult to say, where forbearance should terminate, and discipline begin; but there can be no doubt as to the path of duty, when a member denies the divinity, atonement, and spiritual influence of our blessed Lord. With such a person, it is impossible to have any spiritual communion, and we ought not to hold with him any visible union. Reason as well as revelation forbids it.

3. Disturbing the peace of the church in any way, is an offence that imperatively demands the exercise of discipline.

“A man that is a heretic,* after the first and second admonition reject.” Titus iii. 10. “I would they were cut off that trouble you.” Gal. v. 12. “Mark them which cause divisions, and avoid them.” Rom. xvi. 17. “We command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walks disorderly.” 2 Thes. iii. 6.

We are here taught, that if any man disturb the peace, or break the unity of the church, no matter in what way, whether by insinuating that the pastor does not preach the gospel, or by forming a party against him, or by raising up a division to oppose the proceedings of the society in a factious and contentious manner, he must without delay be dealt with as an offender. He may be a moral, and in appearance a holy man, but this is not to screen him from discipline: on the contrary, these very qualities enable him, if suffered to continue, to do the greater mischief. A factious temper, when united with reputed sanctity, is the most dangerous character that can exist in a Christian society. An immoral man can do little harm; his vices have a repellent power to drive away from him, all who have a regard for their own reputation; but a man who, under the guise of piety, becomes a troubler of Israel, will be a troubler indeed. He should be instantly called to account for his conduct, and if not reclaimed by mild and affectionate admonition, separated from communion. As long as the church contains such an individual, it is cherishing a viper in its bosom.

*The word here translated heretic signifies, rather the author and leader of a party, whatever his opinions may be, than one who holds erroneous sentiments. It means a factious person, who raises a sect in the society, whether the ground of their association be a matter of feeling or opinion.

4. Suffering near relatives to want the necessaries of life, when able to relieve them.

“If any man provide not for his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.” 1 Tim. v. 8.

5. Living in a state of irreconcilable enmity with any of the brethren, and refusing to make suitable concessions for an injury inflicted. “If he will not hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.” Matt. xviii. 17.

II. The manner of proceeding in cases of discipline.

There are many things, of which no other notice should be taken than the private admo-nition of one member to another. When the offence is comparatively trivial, and known only to an individual or two, nothing more is necessary than for these individuals, without saying a syllable about the matter to any one else, to go in a spirit of great meekness and affection to the offender, and to admonish him. If the desired effect is not produced, they should then acquaint the pastor with the fact, who will join his admonition to theirs, and this will in most cases be sufficient to produce a spirit of contrition. It is very undesirable to bring any thing more into our church meetings than is absolutely necessary; they will otherwise become the scene of endless contention. It must be intrusted to the pastor's discretion, to decide what matters shall be brought under the review of the society. If the sin be attended with much aggravation, and be generally known, it is his duty to mention it to the church. Should the offender confess the fact, and manifest satisfactory proofs of contrition, a simple and affectionate admonition to him to go and sin no more, is sufficient. The church should be satisfied, and restore him forthwith to their confidence. But if he be obstinate—if he either deny the charge, or palliate his sin, it would be proper to appoint two or three discreet individuals to inquire into the fact, and to endeavour to bring him to repentance. At the time the deputation is appointed, a resolution ought to be passed, suspending the individual from the privileges of communion.* Time after time he should be visited by the pastor, and admonished; and if after one, or two, or three months, he should confess his offence, and

* The suspension from the table, which is denominated the lesser excommunication, is opposed by some as a measure that has no Scripture warrant. But may it not, like many other of our practices, be fairly deduced from general principles, and be as proper as though it were expressly enjoined? Does not reason and the very nature of things require it? Is there no medium between a mere admonition and the awful extremity of expulsion? What is to be done in those cases, where neither the guilt nor the innocence of an individual is at once apparent to the church; but still a strong, very strong case, so far as prima facie evidence goes, is made out against him; or where there is some appearance of penitence, but yet that penitence is equivocal? Are we to admit that individual to the full privileges of communion? what, while his conduct is under examination, and his character, to say the best, suspicious? It is useless to affirm that he is innocent till proved guilty; this may do in worldly matters, where no communion of heart is necessary; but not in the church of God, where the very act of sitting down at the sacred table is an expression of mutual confidence, esteem and love. Besides, even in civil affairs, a man is denied the rights of innocence before he is proved guilty; I mean during the interval between his arrest and trial. He is then in discover satisfactory contrition, he should without delay be restored to the confidence and communion of the church. But after waiting a reasonable time, and waiting in vain, for any marks of repentance, the church should proceed to separate him from their communion. His contumacy has immeasurably aggravated his original offence. He has now resisted pertinaciously, the command and will of Christ, declared through the church, and must be treated as a heathen man and a publican. If he neglect to hear the church, he must, what ever might have been his original transgression, be expelled from its fellowship.

a state of suspension. Analogous to his, is the case of a suspected member, and who must therefore be suspended till proved innocent or penitent. Still more culpable, would it be, to proceed to ex-communication, while there are signs of penitence, even though those signs were not quite satisfactory. Exclude the act of suspension from discipline, and the churches will often be involved in the dilemma of either having their confidence impaired by retaining suspicious members, or being obliged to expel those who are not so hopeless as to be consigned to this awful condition. To say that they may be admitted again as soon as they are proved to be penitent, is to destroy the salutary terrors of a sentence, which ought not to be pronounced, but in the last extremity, and the solemnity of which, nothing should be allowed to impair.

In some cases, where the crime is highly scandalous, and very notorious, it is necessary, for the honour of religion, the credit of the society, and the good of the offender, to proceed immediately to excommunication, as soon as the fact is clearly proved.

By excommunication, we mean nothing more than an entire separation of the offender from all relation to the church whatever, and an utter exclusion from its privileges. The solemn sentence is purely spiritual, designed to maintain the purity of the church, and to manifest the glory of Christ's holiness in the government of his kingdom, and cannot extend to the person, estate, liberty, or any civil rights whatever, of the excluded member.*

* There is some difficulty, and consequently has been much dispute, about the precise import of the apostle's expression, 1 Cor. v. 5, "To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh." The same expression is used in reference to Hymeneus and Philetus, 1 Tim. i. 20. "Whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." Some have supposed, that nothing more is intended than their being delivered over again to the kingdom of Satan, from which they were translated into the kingdom or church of Christ. In other words, that they were sent back again to the state of unconverted men, to be subject to the usurped dominion of the god of this world, and led captive by him at his will. But I do not see how by this means they were to learn "not to blaspheme," or to have "the flesh destroyed," which are stated by the Apostle, as the end and design of his thus dealing with them. To get over this, some have supposed that the offender's pride, lust, and other fleshly passions, would be mortified when he found himself despised and shunned by all. This view of the case, is rather far-fetched, and does not agree so well with the more natural interpretation of the words given by others, nor with the threatenings denounced by the Apostle in other places. 1 Cor. iv. 21. 2 Cor. xiii. 1. It is certain the Apostles had power to punish notorious offenders with disease and death. If so, may we not believe that the command which the Apostle gave on this occasion to the Corinthians, "to deliver the incestuous person to Satan for the destruction of his flesh," was an exertion of that power? The only difficulty which occurs in regard to this interpretation is, that it ascribes to Satan an instrumentality in the infliction of disease, which is no where acknowledged in the word of God. More than hints, however, are to be found both in the Old Testament and New, that such an influence is possessed by him. The case of Job, and the woman whose case is mentioned, Luke xiii. 16, "whom Satan hath bound, lo these eighteen years," are quite in point.

The sentence of excommunication should never be proceeded to by the church, but with the greatest caution and seriousness; it should be accompanied with sorrowful and humble confession of the delinquent's sin, and earnest

prayer that it may have a suitable effect upon his mind, and the mind of others; it should be done in the name of the Lord Jesus, and not as an act of the church's own authority; it should have an immediate reference to the ends of church fellowship, and the benefit of the offender; it should be unattended by any emotions of wrath, malice, party spirit, or personal resentment; in short, from the beginning to the end of the fearful proceeding, there should be a manifestation of all that deliberation, discretion, seriousness, grief, and awe, which this solemn act of excision seems naturally to demand. There appears in this act, a reference to the future judgment of Christ. In one sense, the church now judges for Christ in matters of his kingdom; and wo to them who dare to pronounce this sentence, without being persuaded on good grounds, that it is the sentence of Christ himself. It is the echo of his awful voice, saying even now to the offender, "Depart from my house;" and unless the offender repent, an anticipation of his sentence, saying at the last day, "Depart from my heaven."

Mr. Hall's description of the nature and usefulness of excommunication, is very striking. "I am far from thinking lightly of the spiritual power, with which Christ has armed his church. It is a high and mysterious one, which has no parallel on earth. Nothing in the order of means, is equally adapted to awaken compunction in the guilty, with spiritual censures impartially administered; the sentence of excommunication in particular, harmonizing with the dictates of conscience, and re-echoed by her voice, is truly terrible: It is the voice of God, speaking through its legitimate organ, which he who despises, or neglects, ranks with 'heathen men and publicans,' joins the synagogue of Satan, and takes his lot with an unbelieving world, doomed to perdition. Excommunication is a sword, which, strong in its apparent weakness, and the sharper, and the more keenly edged for being divested of all sensible and exterior envelopements, lights immediately on the spirit, and inflicts a wound which no balm can cure, no ointment can mollify, but which must continue to ulcerate and burn, till healed by the blood of atonement, applied by penitence and prayer. In no instance is that axiom more fully verified, 'The weakness of God is stronger than men, and the foolishness of God is wiser than men,' than in the discipline of his church. By encumbering it with foreign aid, they have robbed it of its real strength; by calling in the aid of temporal pains and penalties, they have removed it from the spirit to the flesh, from its contact with eternity, to unite it to secular interests; and as the corruption of the best things is the worst, have rendered it the scandal and reproach of our holy religion.

“While it retains its character, as a spiritual ordinance, it is the chief bulwark against the disorders which threaten to overturn religion, the very nerve of virtue, and next to the preaching of the cross, the principal antidote to the ‘corruptions that are in the world through lust.’ Discipline in a church occupies the place of laws in a state; and as a kingdom, however excellent its constitution, will inevitably sink into a state of extreme wretchedness, in which laws are either not enacted, or not duly administered; so a church which pays no attention to discipline, will either fall into confusion, or into a state so much worse, that little or nothing remains worth regulating. The right of inflicting censures, and of proceeding in extreme cases to excommunication, is an essential branch of that power with which the church is endowed, and bears the same relation to discipline that the administration of criminal justice bears to the general principles of government. When this right is exerted in upholding the ‘faith once delivered to the saints,’ or enforcing a conscientious regard to the laws of Christ, it maintains its proper place, and is highly beneficial. Its cognizance of doctrine is justified by apostolic authority; ‘a heretic, after two or three admonitions, reject:’ nor is it to any purpose to urge the difference betwixt ancient heretics and modern, or that to pretend to distinguish truth from error, is a practical assumption of infallibility."

It is a question worthy of consideration, "How church members should conduct themselves toward those who are thus separated from their communion." We are not left without instructions on this head. "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." 2 Thes. iii. 14, 15. "I have written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one, no not to eat." 1 Cor. v. 11. Two things are here evident: first—We are expressly commanded, to withdraw from all voluntary association with such individuals. We are to shun their company. We are not even to sit down with them at an ordinary meal, nor freely to converse with them on secular affairs, except they are our relations, or we are necessarily thrown by the contingencies of business into their society. Of course, none of the relative ties are to be dissolved, nor any of the social duties to be neglected; but all voluntary intercourse with excommunicated persons, who are not related to us by the ties of nature, is to be cautiously avoided: and this is to be done, to testify our abhorrence of the sin, and that the offender himself may be ashamed, and feel the awful situation in which his transgression has placed him.

But it is equally evident from the apostolic injunction, that excommunicated persons are not to be utterly forsaken and abandoned. "Count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother." Pains should be taken to bring them to repentance. They should not be given up to their sins, and given over as it were, to become more and more vile. The pastor and members should seek opportunities to admonish and warn them: "Peradventure God may give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." Upon their penitence and reformation, they should be again received into communion with compassion and love, joy and gratitude. "Better," says Dr. Owen, "never excommunicate a person at all, than forsake and abandon him when he is expelled, or refuse to receive him back again upon his repentance; but there is a class of persons unto whom, if a man be an offender, he shall be so for ever."

Great care should be taken by a church, to display the most inflexible IMPARTIALITY in the exercise of discipline. To allow the riches, talents, or influence of any offender, to blind the eyes of the society, and to screen him from punishment, is a most flagrant crime against the authority of Christ, and the laws of his kingdom. We can scarcely conceive of any thing more displeasing in his sight, any thing more likely to bring down his fearful indignation upon a church, than to allow his temple to be defiled, out of compliment to secular distinctions.

No member should be allowed to resign, in order to avoid expulsion. If he has done any thing worthy of censure or separation, he should not be allowed to retire with his conduct unnoticed. "It becomes not the wisdom and order of any society, intrusted with authority for its own preservation, as the church is by Christ himself, to suffer persons obnoxious to censure by the fundamental rules of that society, to cast off all respect unto it, to break their order and relation, without animadverting thereupon, according to the authority wherewith they are intrusted. To do otherwise is to expose their order unto contempt, and proclaim a diffidence in their own authority for the spiritual punishment of offenders." *

On the Removal of Members from one Church to another in the same Town.

This of course can happen only in those places where there are more than one church of the same denomination, and in such places it is a very common occurrence. Church fellowship is a very sacred bond, which ought not to be formed without serious deliberation, nor broken without just cause. No member should dissolve his connexion with a Christian society, but upon such grounds as will stand the test of reason and revelation. The slight pretexts on which some persons transfer themselves from one church to another, betrays a frivolity and volatility of mind, which looks like trifling with sacred things. On the least offence, either imaginary or real, produced either by minister or people, they send for their dismissal to another communion, and are off.

* Dr. Owen on Church Government, p. 222.

Sometimes a disagreement with one of the members, is the cause of secession. This is manifestly wrong. The scripture is very explicit on the subject of offences. Instead of leaving a church on this ground, we ought to take immediate steps towards reconciliation. It is no justification to say, "If I cannot sit down at the Lord's Supper in love with a person, I had better not sit down at all;" because we ought without delay to have the offence removed, and come to an agreement with the offender.

Some persons break their connexion with a church, because they think that there are sinful members retained in its communion. Instead of removing, their duty is either by private admonition to reclaim such supposed delinquents, or by informing the pastor, to take the proper measures for their expulsion. If the matter should be brought before the church, and the brethren should not be convinced that there is sufficient ground to proceed to discipline, we ought immediately to acquiesce, and to suppose that through want of information, or some secret prejudice, we had formed an incorrect opinion, and from that time should feel charitably toward the individuals in question. And even if we were persuaded that the church had erred in its judgment, yet as they examined the evidence and acted upon conviction, it is not our duty to retire. They endeavoured to decide impartially, and as they did not connive at wickedness, their communion is not defiled. Societies must be governed by fixed general laws, which may sometimes fail to reach particular cases. We must always act upon evidence, and if this fail to prove a member guilty, we must still consider ourselves bound to continue him in the privileges of communion.

If a church refuses to take cognizance of flagrant immorality, or in order to screen some rich and powerful member, declines to receive testimony, or acts in direct opposition to the clearest evidence, a case which rarely happens, then the communion is defiled, and a member may conscientiously withdraw.

It happens not unfrequently that members secede, because a pastor is chosen, whose election they cannot approve. This forms a difficult case of casuistry. It ought, however, to be a last resort. We should never form a separation on this ground in haste. We should give a patient and impartial hearing to the minister, and strive, by every possible effort, to have our prejudices removed. We should not suffer ourselves to be disaffected towards him, by circumstances trivial and indifferent. We should not lend our ear to those who have similar views, nor suffer a party feeling to be excited; but acting singly and for ourselves, strive to edify so far by his ministry, as to render a secession unnecessary. If, however, after earnest prayer for direction, coupled with great efforts to subdue every thing of prejudice, we still find our religious edification not promoted by his preaching, then we may quietly and peaceably retire, provided there are numbers and property sufficient to found another congregation, and erect another place of worship. We should never attempt to prejudice the minds of others; a step which is not unfrequently taken by some to justify their own conduct; but which is attended with more guilt than words can describe.

It is quite unlawful to separate, merely on the ground of dissatisfaction with the decision of the church, in its ordinary affairs.

It is equally sinful to retire, because of some imaginary or real offence given us by the pastor.

The same steps of explanation and reconciliation are to be taken in this case, as in that of a private member. We should go to him alone, but in the spirit of the greatest meekness and respect, on account of his office. Nothing should be said in the way of accusation, crimination, or demand; but a kind, respectful, modest statement of the supposed offence should be given, which, with any reasonable man, will be always sufficient to lead to a satisfactory explanation.

A member ought not to retire, even on the ground of supposed misconduct on the part of the pastor. If his inconsistencies affect his Christian character, they should become matter of church investigation: if they are but imprudences, or the lighter imperfections to which even the best of men are subject, we should be rather disposed to treat them with all reasonable candour, and cover them with the veil of love; at the same time it would be proper, that a respectful and kind expostulation should be delivered to him by the deacons, or senior members of his flock.

In cases where a newly married couple are members of two churches, it is quite lawful for the wife to withdraw from her own church to that of her husband, provided she can edify by his minister; if not, the husband ought not to desire her to accompany him. If by a removal of our dwelling place, we are situated at an inconvenient distance from the house of God, it is quite justifiable in this case, to connect ourselves with a religious society nearer to our abode.

On the Conduct to be observed by a Church in the Election of a Pastor.

WHEN a Christian minister is removed, either to his eternal rest, or to some other sphere of labor in the present world, the choice of a successor always brings on a crisis in the history of the church of which he was the pastor. No event that could happen, can place the interests of the society in greater peril. Distraction and division have so frequently resulted from this circumstance, so many churches have been rent by it, that an argument has been founded upon it, if not against the right of popular election to the pastoral office, yet against the expediency of using it. It must be admitted that on these occasions, our principles as dissenters, and our practices as Christians, have not been unfrequently brought into disrepute. We have been accused of wrangling about a teacher of religion, till we have lost our religion itself in the affray; and the state of many congregations proves, that the charge is not altogether without foundation. God sometimes overrules these divisions for the furtherance of the gospel, even as he has made the introduction of evil into the moral world, an occasion of displaying his glory; but this alters not the character of the event. Schisms are altogether evil in themselves, and are always to be deprecated, and if possible, avoided. This occurrence forms no solid objection, however, against the great principle—the right of every Christian to choose his own spiritual instructor. We must carefully separate in a system, between what is accidental, and what is essential; and if through the infirmity of our nature, some evils of an adventitious kind, arise in the administration of a system clearly founded on reason and revelation, we are no more authorized to subvert the latter on account of the former, than we should be, to demolish a hospital, in order to suppress the litigations which arise in its committee, about the direction of its concerns. What we have to do in one case and the other, is to leave the institution untouched, and endeavour to avoid these evils, which arise from our imperfections, to obscure its excellence, and limit its benefits.

Under these views, I shall proceed to point out in what way a church should conduct itself, when called upon to exercise its right in the choice of a minister.

Let all the members as soon as their pastor is removed or dead, seriously reflect on the crisis into which the church is brought, the great importance of preserving its peace, and the influence that their individual conduct may have upon the future prosperity of the society. Let them deliberately reflect thus, "The church is now coming into circumstances of peril, and I, as an individual, may be accessory, according as my conduct shall be, to its injury or prosperity. God forbid our harmony should be disturbed, or our Zion become otherwise than a quiet habitation. So far as depends upon myself, I will sacrifice any thing but principle, rather than have those scenes of distraction and division amongst us, which are so common in the religious world."

Let the members instantly make it an object of fervent and constant prayer, that the church may be kept in harmony and peace, guided in the choice of a minister, and that they may be enabled, each in their private capacity, to conduct themselves in a spirit of quietness and brotherly love. Each one alone should pray for the Christian temper; and periodical seasons should be appointed, when these objects should be recognized, and their desires expressed by social prayer. Prayer is the best bulwark against strifes. The spirit of healing and union, descends in the cloud of incense formed by the church's prayers.

Let the members recollect, that the choice of a pastor is one of those occasions, which render pre-eminently necessary the exercise of that LOVE, which St. Paul has so beautifully described in the first Epistle to the Corinthians. This chapter should be devoutly read at every church meeting, together with the 122d and the 133d Psalms. These should form the standing lessons for the occasion. The business now under consideration will require on all hands the utmost caution, candour, patience, and mutual forbearance. Many opinions are now to be consulted, many tempers to be tried, and each one should subject the passions of his own mind to the government of the word of God. If LOVE were elevated to the throne of the church, all would go right. No division would then take place. Difference of opinion might be expressed, but it would produce no alienation of heart. Directly therefore as it becomes necessary to elect a new pastor, the relationship of the church as brethren, and the new commandment of Christ, as the law of his kingdom, should by a solemn act of the church be recognized afresh.

The members should study St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy and Titus, to learn what are the qualifications of a Christian minister. They should well consider and settle with themselves, what objects should direct their choice. It appears to me, they should unite in their view, personal edification and general benefit. They should seek for a man, whom they can hear with pleasure, and who is likely to prove attractive to others. The benefit of the society at large, is the ultimate standard, to which private and personal taste must ever give way.

Great care should be taken by those to whom the church has delegated the power of procuring candidates, not to invite upon probation, any individual of whose suitableness they have not received previous and satisfactory testimony. Let it by no means be thought necessary to wait long after the decease of a pastor, before a successor is elected. Respect for his memory, does not require that the pulpit should be continued vacant, or that the weeds of widowhood should be worn by the church, for any given period. When an officer falls in battle, the welfare of the army requires that a successor should be immediately appointed.

Neither is it necessary, that a church should hear a great variety of candidates, before an election is made. To set out with the intention of hearing many, in order to choose one, is of all plans the most injudicious and mischievous. The very idea that others are to follow, will suspend the impartial exercise of the judgment concerning every one, will in all probability lead to a variety of opinions, and ensure a repetition of the state of things at Corinth, where one said, "I am for Paul; another, I am for Apollos; and a third, I am for Cephas." As soon as an individual is found who possesses the scriptural qualifications of a Christian pastor, and in whom the great body of the church is united, he should be immediately chosen, even if he be the first that has presented himself.

Great caution, however, ought to be exercised, in forming a judgment upon the suitableness of an individual. That a proper opportunity might be afforded to the church for coming to this opinion, the probationary term of a candidate's labours should not be too short. Preaching is not the only thing to be judged of; piety, prudence, diligence, general deportment, are all to be taken into the account: and for a trial on all these points, a period of three months cannot be thought too long.

Especial deference should be paid by the younger and inexperienced members of the church, to the opinion of their senior and more experienced brethren. The sentiments of the deacons, and those individuals who have grown grey in the service of the Lord and the church, should be received with great attention, and have great weight. A youth of seventeen is a very incompetent judge of ministerial qualifications, compared with a venerable father of seventy. That haughty spirit which leads a young person, or a novice to say, "I have a vote as well as the oldest and richest, and have as much right to be heard and consulted as they," is not the spirit of the gospel, but of turbulence and faction. How much more amiable and lovely is such a declaration as the following: "I, young and inexperienced, am a very inadequate judge of the suitability of a minister for this situation, and therefore shall be pretty much guided in my decision, by the opinion of others, older and wiser than myself." This is independency exercised in the spirit of the gospel.

All secret canvassing, and attempts to influence the minds of others should be studiously avoided. To see the mean, petty arts of a contested election, carried into the church of God, is dreadful.

It would be well for every church to have a standing rule, that no pastor should be chosen, but by the suffrages of two thirds, or three fourths of the members present. This would preclude much of that cabal and intrigue, which are sometimes employed in cases, where the matter is decided by a mere majority. Besides which, the choice of a pastor is a business of too much importance, to be carried simply by a majority.

It would be well, if in every case, the church could be unanimous; but this is more than can be looked for. It should certainly be sought for in the use of all proper means. The majority should exercise peculiar FORBEARANCE and AFFECTION towards those who are opposed to them, carefully avoiding to impute their objections to any improper motives; listening to their statements with patience; treating them with candour; reasoning with them in the spirit of love; and giving them time to have their difficulties removed. The happiest results have been often the issue of such kind and Christian conduct. If, however, instead of this, the dissentients are treated with harshness and intolerance; if their opposition be attributed to a factious and cavilling temper; if they are regarded with contempt, as a despicable minority, of which no notice should be taken; and are left immediately to themselves, without any conciliatory measures being taken, while the majority proceeds immediately to decide, a schism is sure to be the consequence, as mischievous to the church, as it is disgraceful to religion.

The party who wish a minister to be elected, should seriously reflect thus: "If we choose this man, we may give pain to the minds of a large body of our brethren, which we most anxiously deprecate, and cannot allow ourselves to do, but under the conviction that we are promoting the permanent welfare of the church at large." While the party opposing should say, "The general body appear to consider this minister as possessing the requisite qualification for their pastor, and this has been so satisfactorily ascertained, that it ought not to be with us a light matter to obstruct the general edification.

Nothing but the good of the church shall lead us to set up our opinion in opposition to that of a large majority of its members." Such a lovely temper would generally lead to beneficial results.

It would be very advisable in some cases, for even so large a majority as two thirds, or even three fourths, to give up the point, rather than carry it in opposition to a minority, which includes in it the deacons, and many of the most experienced and respectable members of the society. The majority, in such instances, have the right to decide; but it is a question whether they ought not, for the sake of peace, to waive the exercise of it.

Persons of property and influence should be very careful how they conduct themselves on these occasions.

There are in many churches individuals whose circumstances must necessarily give peculiar weight to their opinions. Let them, however, not assume the office of dictators. Let them not robe themselves in the dress of Diotrephes, nor display amongst the brethren the love of pre-eminence. The system of independency admits of influence, but not of patronage; men may lead, but not drive. Democracies are as liable to the control of a few leading individuals, probably more so, than any other system; but then these individuals should act, by causing the people to act for them. If such an application of the words of scripture were admissible, I would say, "They should render the people willing in the day of their power." An attempt to exert their influence, in opposition to the wishes of the people, is a most irrational, unscriptural assumption of power. To sacrifice the interests of the church for the gratification of their taste; to attempt to force upon a society a man not approved by it, or to reject one who is chosen by it, is the most disgusting exercise, of the most disgusting tyranny.

It unfortunately happens, that when one party has given up a minister in compliment to the other, they almost insensibly oppose an individual, who, in future, may be the favourite of their opponents. It is most sinful to allow the corrupt passions of our nature, thus far to prevail in our hearts, as to turn aside our judgment in affairs so sacred and so important.

When a minister is at length brought in by a large majority, it then becomes a question, what ought to be the conduct of the minority. Should they separate and form another religious society? Certainly not, except as a dernier resort. Let them consider the evils connected with such a state of things. What ill will is often produced between the two societies; how much anti-christian feeling is excited; how it injures the spirit of both parties; what envies, and jealousies, and evil speakings, commence and continue, to the injury of religion, and the triumph of its enemies! Let them, before they separate, endeavour to lay aside their prejudice, and hear for a season, with as much impartiality as possible, the man to whom they object. On his part, much consummate prudence is necessary, and the most conciliatory conduct. All he does and says should have a healing tendency. Much depends upon himself. Great credit is due to that minister, WHO HAS CONCILIATED HIS OPPONENTS WITHOUT ALIENATING HIS FRIENDS, and who has become THE RECONCILING MEDIUM OF TWO PARTIES, ONCE AT VARIANCE ABOUT HIMSELF.

In some cases, a division is necessary. Where this is unavoidable, great efforts should be made to affect it in love. If the two parties cannot unite in peace, at least let them separate in peace. Let the separation take place without alienation. Alas! that this should so rarely be the case!

What we want, to preserve the peace of our churches unbroken, is a more distinct recognition, and a more powerful influence of the principles of the gospel: More humility, more spirituality, more zeal for the divine glory. We carry into the sanctuary, and into the church, our pride, our self-will, our personal taste. That spirit of mutual submission, brotherly love, and surrender of our own gratification to the good of others, which the word of God enjoins, and our profession avows, would keep the church always happy and harmonious, and enable it to pass in safety through the most critical circumstances in which it can be placed. Instead of seeking the good of the whole, the feeling of too many of our members may be thus summarily expressed—"I will have my way." Such a spirit is a source of all the evils to which our churches are ever exposed, and of which it must be confessed they are but too frequently the miserable victims.

On the Propriety of occasionally administering the Lord's Supper in private Houses, for the Sake of sick Persons who are incapable of attending the Solemnities of Publick Worship.

I do not now allude to the practice so common in the Church of England, of administering the sacrament to dying persons, as a preparative for eternity; this custom, so unscriptural in its nature, and so delusory in its tendency, is unknown, I believe, amongst our churches. But instances have occurred, in which our ministers, for the sake of some of their members, who have been long confined to their own habitations by chronic diseases, without the prospect of ever going to the house of God again, have assembled a few others in the chamber of the afflicted person, and administered to them the Lord's supper. The infirm individual is supposed to be a real Christian in church fellowship; the others, joining in the act, are also members of the same church, or Christians of undoubted piety; and the design of the act is not to countenance any pharisaic notions of human merit, which the sick person might have connected with the reception of the sacrament, but simply to give him an opportunity of expressing his obedience, and gratifying his love to Christ, by an observance of our Lord's own institution. Is it right under these circumstances to gratify his request, and observe with him the sacred supper? I think not; and on the following grounds:

1. The Lord's supper is strictly a church ordinance, and not an exercise of mere social religion, such as joint prayer, and therefore ought not be observed but when the church is professedly assembled. It is not an act of social religion which may be performed in any place, where two or three Christians are convened together, by accident or design, but in the place of their public convention, and at the time when they are so convened. All the directions of the apostle, concerning this institution, are given to the church in its collective capacity; and besides this, there are many incidental expressions, which plainly show that this was the view which he took of it, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. In the eleventh chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, he interferes to regulate the abuses which upon this subject had crept into the Corinthian church. He begins the subject thus, "When ye come together in one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper." Now his meaning in this language must evidently be, that merely coming into one place together for a feast, was not enough, but in that one place conforming to all the other regulations delivered by our Lord concerning it. The act of coming together into one place was right so far as it went, but it was not enough. In 1 Cor. v. 8, the apostle says, "Let us keep the feast," i. e. the Lord's supper, "not with old leaven:" in the 7th verse they were commanded to purge out the old leaven, i. e. to put away the offending member; and this was to be done when they were gathered together; the feast was to be observed then, when the church were gathered together.

It is plain therefore that the Lord's supper is a church ordinance, and can with propriety be only observed by the church in its assembled form. But it will probably be said, "Do not two or three persons convened together at any time, or in any place, constitute a church?" The answer to this question depends on circumstances. If these two or three meet together for the purposes, and in the character of a distinct and separate society of Christians, and in the usual time and place of assembly, they are a church, notwithstanding the smallness of their number; but if they meet together as the acknowledged members of another society, which in its general capacity neither do, nor can assemble with them in that place, they are not a church, but merely a part of one; and as such have no right to perform acts which belong to the whole number. This does not imply that it is necessary for every member to be present in order to a meeting of the church, for provided all be invited to assemble in one place, those who meet constitute the church, however few may attend. This may be illustrated by a reference to the British parliament. Two or three members meeting together in one place, do not constitute the senate, nor are their acts legislative. The parliament, are the members assembled by appointment, whether few or many, in the specified place of meeting. Such is the church, not a casual, ambulatory or private meeting of a few of its members, but the body of Christians convened by general notice. The words of Christ, "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," more immediately refer to the exercise of social prayer; but viewed in their most extensive sense, will by no means countenance the idea, that two or three members of a church constitute of themselves a church, until they have separated from their late connexion, and formed themselves into another distinct society.

T

2. The practice in question is contrary to one of the ends of the Lord's supper, which is to be a visible sign of the oneness of the church, of the union of all its members in one body. Hence said the apostle, "We being many are one bread (loaf) and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread (loaf.)" 1 Cor. x. 17. The loaf by its unity shows the oneness of the church; by its division into many parts, its many members. But is not this design of the Lord's supper defeated by its private celebration amongst a few members of the church? Are the two or three assembled in private, detached from the public body, a representation of its unity?

3. There is not a single instance of any company of Christians whose meetings were merely occasional, and who were not united for the purpose of stated fellowship as a church, in a particular place, observing the ordinance of the Lord's supper. And as we have no example, so we have no precept for such things, not so much as a hint that they may be done. Should ministers, therefore, without the shadow of scriptural authority, consent to them?

4. As a precedent, the practice is dangerous; for if the scripture mode of observing the Lord's supper be departed from in one way, it may in another. If ministers depart from the regulations of the New Testament for the advantage of the sick, may they not be led on to do it in other cases, till even the purposes of faction shall be promoted by the practice?

It is not enough to justify it, to say that it is a great loss to the individual who is deprived of the possibility of attending public worship, and therefore it is an act of Christian love to make up, in this way, the privation. We must not, in any instance, exercise charity at the expense of principle. The regulations of the word of God are not to be violated, even for the pious consolation of his people. Every one who is visited by an affliction which confines him to his house, is released from all obligation to observe this command of Christ, "Do this in remembrance of me." The duty to him is impossible, at least in the scriptural mode of it, and impossibility always supersedes obligation. If it ceases to be his duty, it ought no longer to be considered a privilege. All he has to do, is to submit to the privation, and not attempt to supply it in a manner unauthorized by the Word of God.

On the Causes of those Schisms which sometimes distract and disturb the Churches.

The existence of this evil, truth will not allow us to deny, nor ingenuity enable us to conceal.

Divisions in our churches produce incalculable mischief, since they not only prevent the growth of religion, in the distracted societies, but they impair and destroy it; they excite a prejudice, a fearful and destructive prejudice, against the principles of independent churches, and extend their mischief still farther, by obscuring the glory of religion itself. Infidels, like vultures, drawn by the scent of battle, hover over the scenes of these lamentable conflicts, ever ready to gorge their sanguinary appetite, with the blood of the slain. A distracted church is a feast to which the fiends of one world invite the fiends of another, where infidels and devils join in the chorus of infernal irony,—“See how these Christians love one another.”

In searching for the causes of these divisions, we are not to suppose, for a moment, that they are inseparably connected with the congregational form of church government. Even if it were attempted to be proved, that these principles give more opportunity than some others, for the developement of the imperfection yet remaining in the Christian character; yet as long as it can be shown, that they are fairly deducible from scripture, we are not to reject them, but only double our vigilance against the depravity of our own nature. Even these evils are less than others which are connected with the systems of national establishments. That uniformity which is produced by legislative enactments, is far more fatal to the interests of piety, than the occasional disturbances of those churches which are formed upon the ground of voluntary consent. The occasional storm is less mischievous in its effects, than the stagnant and quiescent atmosphere which is purified by no breeze, and settles in the form of fever and pestilence on the face of the earth. But what are the CAUSES of these schisms?

I. Some of these lie with ministers.

1. A defective education, not unfrequently prepares a minister to be the cause of much uneasiness in a Christian church.

Deprived by the circumstances of his birth, of the advantages of education and cultivated society, he enters upon his academic pursuits with little knowledge both of books and of the world. When he has been a student but two or three years, some injudicious congregation, captivated by a few sermons, solicits him to become their pastor. He accepts their invitation, and with little information, still less acquaintance with the habits of society, he enters upon the duties of his office. He soon betrays his ignorance, incompetence, and want of all those qualifications, which fit a person for government in the church, and prepare him for esteem in the world. At length, by the meagreness of his preaching, and the want of prudence and respectability in his conduct, he disgusts his flock, and a conflict ensues. Both parties are to blame; they in tempting him so soon to leave his preparatory studies, and he, in acceding to their wishes. They, however, are mostly to be censured; and so far as their own comfort is concerned, are rightly punished for plucking that fruit which, had it been permitted to hang till it was ripe, would have done them much service. A longer term of education would not only have given him more information, but more knowledge of men and things, and more capacity to conduct himself with propriety. Knowledge is power, by increasing a man's weight of character and degree of influence.

The churches ought to be very cautious of tempting students to leave the schools of the prophets, before the term of education has been completed; and this term in the present age ought to be lengthened rather than diminished. This is an age of activity, more than of study, and therefore a young man should be well instructed at the academy, for he is sure to meet with many interruptions to self-improvement, when he becomes a pastor. An inefficient minister is the cause of many disturbancies; and that inefficiency, where it does exist, is to be often traced up to a contracted term of education.

Much, very much pains should be bestowed by all our tutors, not only to form the scholar, the divine, the preacher, but also the pastor.

2. In some cases, the evil is to be traced to the want of ministerial diligence.

Instead of devoting their time and their energies to the pursuits of the study, they spend one half of their weeks in running about the country to attend public meetings, and the other in gossiping either at their own house, or the houses of their friends. The natural consequence is, that their sermons are poverty itself, or mere repetition of the same sentiments, in the same words. The people become dissatisfied, perhaps remonstrate in a disrespectful way; the minister takes offence; forms a party of his own; and the consequence is, a divided, distracted church. I believe one half of our church quarrels originate in lazy, loitering ministers.

3. Others are IMPRUDENT.

They live beyond their income, involve themselves in debt, and their people in disgrace; or they speak unadvisedly with their lips, and involve themselves in litigation, with either their own friends, or persons of other denominations; or they hastily engage in paper wars with their neighbours; or they marry persons unsuitable to their character, and offensive to their congregation, and thus lay the foundation of uneasiness and dislike; or they become involved in politics, or public business, and thus neglect the interests of the church; or they speak ill of some members to others, and thus raise a prejudice and party against them in the society; or they let down their dignity by becoming the gossiping companions of some of their congregation. In all these, and many other ways, do ministers often prepare the way for dissatisfaction or schism. Piety and prudence in the ministerial character would prevent many of the divisions of our churches.

4. Others are men of bad temper : hasty, impetuous, and peculiarly susceptible of offence.

They are easily offended, and frequently where no intention really existed to wound their minds. They then show their resentment in a way very displeasing to the people. Many hard speeches, and disrespectful terms drop from their lips, which are by some mischief-makers, conveyed to the individuals against whom they were uttered. A fire of contention is soon kindled, and the whole church is enveloped in the flames.

5. Others are immoral.

They commit sin, and yet, attaching to themselves a party, they introduce great disorder and confusion into the society.

It is a point in casuistry, which I do not take upon me to decide, how far a minister might go in sin, and yet, upon his repentance, be authorized to continue his office as a preacher and pastor. I am inclined, however, to think, that if his transgression has been very flagrant, no penitence, however deep, no reformation, however manifest, can justify him in continuing an office, one qualification of which is, that he who holds it should be "blameless," and another, that he should have "a good report of them that are without." Instances have occurred, in which men who have fallen into gross sin, have been restored to penitence, and with it to their accustomed labour and success; but whether these are sufficient to justify the practice admits of a doubt. It has been alleged, that Peter was not discharged from the apostleship because of his crime, which was a very great one. But it may be questioned if our Lord's conduct in this instance can be drawn out into a precedent for ours. This was an extraordinary case under his own direction. Moreover, if our Lord's conduct in retaining Peter after his fall, is a precedent for our retaining ministers who have committed "presumptuous sins," his conduct in employing Judas, whom he knew to be a bad man, may be quoted as authority for employing such as are wicked.

The wonder is, that any church should wish to retain a minister, whose conduct has been grossly immoral, whatever fruits of repentance he might bring forth. It appears to me, therefore, upon the whole, for the interests of true piety, that he who has grossly violated the principles of Christian morality, should think no more of the ministerial office. It is of infinite importance to the interests of religion, that the ministry be not blamed, but its honour maintained with singular care.

6. The tenacity with which some ministers retain their situation, when their labours are no longer acceptable to their people, is another cause of uneasiness.

When from any cause a minister's services are no longer desired by his people, or the bulk of them, it is manifestly his duty to give up his situation as soon as he can procure another. Any attempt to remain in opposition to their wishes, is certainly wrong, as the union is not only formed on the ground of mutual consent, but for the purpose of mutual edification.

Let all ministers consider how much the peace and prosperity of the churches depend on their diligence, prudence, temper, and piety. Let them tremble at the thought of introducing strife and division to any part of the kingdom of Christ.

II. Other causes of division are to be found amongst the people.

1. A very large proportion of our schisms arise at the time of choosing a minister. This has already received a distinct and separate consideration.

2. A hasty choice of an unsuitable person to fill the pastoral office, has frequently ended in great uneasiness.

The people have discovered their error, when its rectification was sure to cause much trouble to the society. Upon our system of church government, it is not easy to displace an unsuitable individual, and therefore great caution should be observed in choosing him. Few men will venture to remain in opposition to the wishes of a whole society; but how rarely does it happen that an individual has no party in his favour.

3. A peculiar and dishonourable fickleness of disposition on the part of the church, is in some instances the cause of division.

They soon grow tired of the man whom they chose at first with every demonstration of sincere and strong regard. They seldom approve a minister beyond a period of seven years, and are so uniform in the term of their satisfaction, as to make their neighbours look out for a change, when that term is about to expire.

4. Uneasiness has often arisen between a minister and his people, by the unwillingness of the latter to raise the necessary support for their pastor.

They have seen him struggling with the cares of an increasing family, and marked the cloud of gloom, as it thickened and settled upon his brow; they knew his wants, and yet, though able to double his salary, and dissipate every anxious thought, they have refused to advance his stipend, and have robbed him of his comfort, either to gratify their avarice, or indulge their sensuality. He remonstrates; they are offended: love departs, esteem is diminished, confidence is destroyed; while ill will, strife, and alienation, grow apace. How easily might all this have been prevented. A few pounds a year more, given by some individuals who could not have missed the sum, would have spared the peace of a faithful servant of Christ, and what is of still greater consequence, the harmony of a Christian church. Can those persons be disciples of Jesus, who would put a religious society in peril, rather than make so small a sacrifice? Let not the voice of avarice reply, "Can that man be a minister of Christ, who would feel offended with his church, for not increasing his salary?" But what is a minister to do? Starve? or beg? or steal? If he is already living in luxury, and expects more, he deserves to be denied. But I am supposing a case, where, in the judgment of candour, he has not enough to support his family in comfort.

5. An improper method of expressing dissatisfaction with a minister's labours or conduct, has often led to trouble in a church.

I do not pretend to say, that a minister occupies a seat too elevated for the voice of complaint to reach him, or that he is entitled (like his Master) to an entire exemption from all that interference which would say unto him, "What doest thou?" There are times when it might be proper to remind a minister of some duty neglected, some pastoral avocation overlooked. But if anonymous and insolent letters are sent him; if young, impertinent, or dictatorial persons wait upon him; if, instead of the modest, respectful hint of some individual whose age and station give him a right to be heard, he is schooled in an objurgatory strain, by those who have nothing to recommend them but their impudence and officiousness, no wonder, considering that he is but an imperfect man, if he feel offended with the liberty, and almost command the intruders from his presence. The apostle has spread over the ministerial character the shield of his authority, to defend it from the rude attacks of those who would act the part of self-elected accusers. "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father." 1 Tim. v. 1.

6. The domineering spirit and conduct of some leading members, has often been the source of very considerable uneasiness to our churches.

If amongst the first disciples of Christ, there existed a strife for pre-eminence, and in the churches planted by the apostles there was to be found a Diotrefes; it is not to be wondered at, however much it is to be regretted, that there should be individuals in our days, who carry the spirit of the world into the church, manifest a love of power, and struggle with others for its possession. Their property, and perhaps their standing, give them influence, and this unhappily is employed in endeavouring to subjugate both the minister and the people. No scheme is supported unless it originates with them; while every plan of theirs is introduced, almost with the authority of a law. They expect to be consulted on the most trivial occasions, and if in any thing opposed, become resentful, sullen, and distant. Little by little, they endeavour to gain a complete ascendancy in the society, and watch with peculiar jealousy every individual who is likely to become a rival. The minister at length scarcely dare leave home for a Sabbath, without asking their leave, nor can the people form the least scheme of usefulness without their permission. When they are at any time resisted, they breathe out threats of giving up all interest in church affairs, at which the terrified and servile society, end their resistance, consolidate the power of their tyrant, and rivet the fetters of slavery upon their own necks. At length, however, a rival power springs up: a family of growing reputation and influence refuse any longer to submit to the thralldom; opposition to unlawful domination commences, the church is divided into factions, the minister becomes involved in the dispute, distraction follows, and division finishes the scene. Lamentable state of things! Would God it rarely occurred. Let the leading individuals of our churches, the men of property, and the deacons, consider what mischief may be occasioned by the least assumption of undue influence. Let them watch against the lust of power: it is a passion most guilty and most mischievous: it arises almost imperceptibly from their situation, and its progress, like that of sin in general, is slow but certain. Let them conduct themselves with humility, and deliver their opinions with modesty, and remember that every exertion of illegal authority is an invasion, not only of the liberty of the church, but of the prerogative of its Divine Head. Let them consider themselves as persons, whose opinion is to have no other influence than that which its own wisdom gives it; and that the measure of this wisdom is to be estimated, not by them, but by their brethren. Let them seek for that humility, which can bear to be opposed, and that gentleness of temper which can submit to contradiction. Let them distinctly bear in recollection that the church of God is a society, where all are equals, all are brethren; where the government of terror, or interest, or property, is unknown, but where love and humility are to prevail, and no other rule is to be acknowledged but that of Jesus Christ.

7. The relaxation of scriptural discipline, may be mentioned as another source of evil.

Where the church is unscripturally lax in the admission of members, and for the sake of enlarging its bulk, admits improper materials, it is certainly multiplying the causes of schism and decay. If a wall is built with unsound bricks and untempered mortar, it may stand for a while, but cracks and delapidations must sooner or later be visible in its structure. Thus if men of unsanctified dispositions be admitted to the church, what can be expected from such individuals in a time of conflicting opinion, but fuel for the flame of contention? The danger is considerably increased, where the individuals, improperly admitted, are persons of property. If the ordinary rules of admission are dispensed with for the sake of bringing into fellowship the wealthy and the worldly; if a less rigid examination of their personal religion take place, it is little to be wondered at, that mischief should ultimately ensue. For the sake of its glittering exterior, many a church has taken a serpent to its bosom; or to adopt a scriptural allusion, has welcomed an Achan to the camp, for the sake of his Babylonish vest and golden wedge. If a rich member be an unsanctified man, he has a double power of mischief, and in the time of trouble, this will be felt to the bitter experience of the church. "Whence come wars and fightings amongst you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?" James iv. 1. Of course, then, if we are careless in the admission of members, and receive those who do not give satisfactory evidence of personal religion, we are multiplying the sources of contention within our societies. Civil wars are to be expected in that country, which extends without caution the rights of citizens to aliens and enemies. Wolves admitted in sheep's clothing will worry and scatter the flock. As, therefore, we would not prepare for division and distraction, let us act upon scriptural principles, in the admission of members.

8. The existence and prevalence of an Antinomian spirit, is a fruitful source of schism in our churches.

“As every age of the church is marked by its appropriate visitation of error, so little penetration is requisite to perceive that Antinomianism is the epidemic malady of the present, and that it is an evil of deadly malignity. It is qualified for mischief by the very properties which might seem to render it merely an object of contempt—its vulgarity of conception, its paucity of ideas, its determined hostility to taste, science, and letters. It includes within a compass which every head can contain, and every tongue can utter, a system which cancels every moral tie, consigns the whole human race to the extremes of presumption or despair; erects religion on the ruins of morality, and imparts to the dregs of stupidity all the powers of the most active poison.”*

This ruinous spirit has already disorganized or convulsed so many churches, that it is high time the tocsin should be sounded against it, and all good citizens of Zion take the alarm. It must be confessed, however, that it does not always originate amongst the people. A perversion of divine truth so monstrous, so mischievous, and absurd, would hardly have acquired such power and prevalence, if it had not received the sanction of ministerial authority. I speak not now of those ministers who are the avowed and consistent patrons of the system, but of men more reputable, and whose strain of preaching is in general more scriptural; men who abhor the tenets of Antinomianism, but who are ignorantly the abettors of these tenets. When such ministers dwell only on the doctrinal parts of revealed truth, and state these in a phraseology capable of misconstruction; when their preaching is exclusively confined to a few topics, and to a stiff systematic exhibition of them; when a wretched taste for spiritualizing and allegorizing pervades their pulpit discussions; when the facts and doctrines of the gospel are abstractly stated, without being made the grounds and motives of social duty and moral excellence; when terms obviously scriptural are avoided, in compliment to a system which reprobates without understanding them, and their sermons are encumbered and disfigured with the phraseology of a false experience; when believers are flattered and caressed into a high conceit of their peculiar excellence; then, whatever be the preacher's tenets or intentions, must Antinomianism be generated and cherished. Ofttimes has this elfish spirit risen up to be the tormentor of the father that begat him; but if quiet till his head was beneath the clods of the valley, he has possessed and convulsed the church during the time of his successor.

* Robert Hall.

To cure this evil, then, let ministers be cautious how they preach. Let them give a full exhibition of the doctrines of grace ; but at the same time let them exhibit these doctrines in a scriptural manner, as the basis of holiness and moral excellence : let them introduce, in their preaching, all the varieties of revealed truth ; let them avoid the trammels of system, nor ever attempt to corrupt the testimonies of scripture by making a text say what it was never intended to affirm. The chief source of Antinomianism is in the pulpit, and let the first effort, therefore, be employed on the fountain, to render this pure and salutary ; and the next be devoted to drain off these streams, which are corrupting the churches.

When an individual, or any individuals, are known to cavil at the sermons of the minister, and to be employed in exciting a prejudice against him, by insinuating that he does not preach the gospel, they should be reasoned and expostulated with, both by the minister and the more judicious members of his flock. Every mild and persuasive method should be adopted and employed either to convince, or silence them. If they cannot be convinced, they should at least be bound over to keep the peace, and brought under promise not to trouble the church, or attempt to sow the seeds of disaffection in the minds of the brethren. If they consent, on these terms, to remain in communion, they should of course be retained ; but if again detected in the act of disturbing the society, they should forthwith be put away, as the troublers of Israel. I have known instances, in which ministers of great eminence and influence have suffered such individuals to remain in communion, for the sake of peace, and have trusted to their own authority to prevent the mischief from spreading. This, however, is chaining the fiend, not casting him out, and leaving him to burst his fetters, when the hand that held him in vassalage is paralysed by death, and permitting him to waste and devour the church, under the rule of a younger or inferior minister. An act of authority, scripturally and seasonably exerted, would thus have destroyed an evil, which by a temporizing policy, is bequeathed to a successor, who can neither destroy nor control it.

9. After all that has been said upon distinct and specific causes of disturbance, it must be admitted that the grand source of ecclesiastical distraction, is the very feeble operation of Christian principles on the hearts of church members. There is not that solemn recognition and powerful influence of these principles which there ought to be. The two virtues of LOVE and HUMILITY, if prevalent, would effectually preserve the peace of the church against the evils of intestine commotion. Without these, even the kingdom of Christ, no less than the kingdoms of this world, is sure to be convulsed with faction, and torn by schism. As long as Christians suffer the passions of men to agitate their minds and direct their conduct in the assembly of the saints, so long must we expect to see even that holy convention liable to the distractions of mere worldly communities. Pride is the polluted and polluting fountain of faction. It is pride that makes men turbulent and contentious; that renders them imperious, dogmatical and overbearing; that drives them upon the inflexible determination to have their own way, and that makes them regardless of the opinions and feelings of others. HUMILITY and LOVE would keep all quiet and orderly. There is one single passage of scripture, which, if sacredly observed, would forever shut out the divider of the brethren. "If there be, therefore, any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife, or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which also was in Christ Jesus."* The observance of this single injunction would ever preserve our harmony, and make our church meetings to be scenes where all the air is love, and all the region peace.

* This passage of Scripture should be printed in large letters, and hung up in the full view of the congregation, every time they meet as a Christian church, that it might be referred to as the rule of their conduct and their spirit.

And where is our religion, if we do not obey this apostolic command? We must come back to the first principles of practical piety, and cultivate the passive virtues of the christian temper. We must remember that christianity is being like Christ, and that unless we partake of that love "which suffereth long and is kind; which envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up; which doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; which believeth all things, beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things;" we are only "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." The necessity of the Christian temper as a personal possession, and its importance as a relative blessing, has hitherto been but feebly perceived, and reluctantly acknowledged. Amidst the controversies which have been carried on about the doctrines of revelation, the spirit of religion has been too much lost sight of: And what, after all, is the doctrine without the spirit, but the body without the soul? Strange indeed it is, that men, who by their own confession are apostate, ruined, helpless sinners, should want HUMILITY; and that they who believe themselves to be saved from hell by unmerited mercy, should be destitute of LOVE!

Never until we are brought to a more implicit submission to the authority of Christ, and to a more distinct and practical recognition of the principles of true religion, can we rationally expect to see Zion a quiet and peaceable habitation. Heaven itself would be a region of storms if pride could enter, or love diminish, in those realms of perfect peace. We must crucify that selfishness, which fixes its exclusive observation on our own gratification, and cherish that expansive benevolence which looks upon the good of others. We must contend who shall be lowest, not who shall be highest. We must seek to please, and not merely to be pleased. In these things must our efforts begin, to suppress and prevent the division of our churches. Let ministers inculcate this temper from the pulpit, and exhibit it in their conduct; let private Christians receive the instructions, and copy the example of their pastors. Let both remember that HUMILITY and LOVE are the necessary fruits of our doctrines, the highest beauty of our character, and the guardian angels of our churches.

:

INDEX.

CHAPTER I.	On the Nature of a Christian Church	11
„	II. On the Nature and Design of Church Fellowship	27
„	III. The Privileges of Membership	35
„	IV. The General Duties of Church Members in their Individual Capacity	42
„	V. On the Duties of Church Members to their Pastors	59
„	VI. Duties of Church Members towards each other	81
„	VII. The Duties of Church Members to the Members of other Christian Societies	118
„	VIII. The Duties of Church Members in their peculiar Character and Station	130
„	IX. Miscellaneous Subjects.
	On the true Nature of Church Power	175
	On the Mode of conducting Church Meetings	175
	On the Admission of Members to the Church	178
	On Discipline	183
	On the Removal of Members from one Church to another in the same Town	198
	On the Conduct to be observed by a Church in the Election of a Pastor	203
	On the Propriety of occasionally administering the Lord's Supper in Private Houses for the sake of sick Persons who are incapable of attend- ing the Solemnities of Public Worship	214
	On the causes of those Schisms which sometimes distract and disturb the Church	219

Princeton Theological Seminary Libraries

1 1012 01161 2886

